

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

TAKING THE BUDS.

We are once again brought to the most important period in chrysanthemum growing, which is that of bud selection. The commercial grower does not figure much on buds so early, excepting on the earliest varieties, but the exhibitor, who wants the very largest flowers, must, in the majority of cases, get the crown bud from the middle of August onward.

That the novice may understand the difference between what are known as crown buds and terminal buds, I would say that crowns are the buds that form in the earlier stages of the growth of the plant, the terminal bud being the terminus, or finish of the growth. The difference between the buds may be known in several ways, the time they are produced being one way. No variety that I am acquainted with produces terminal buds so early in the year as August; consequently any bud produced in that month can be set down as a crown.

The crown bud always has two or more growth shoots that appear around it, and these shoots, if not removed, will grow on, and, taking the nourishment from the bud, will render the latter useless. If the date is not too early, the surrounding shoots can be rubbed off and then the bud will develop properly.

The terminal bud is surrounded by a cluster of smaller buds, and appears in September or later, according to the time the plants are set out. The flower produced from a terminal bud is never so large as from crown buds. In some cases it is more highly colored, some of the pink varieties showing this condition, but very few prizes are won by terminal bud flowers.

How early can I take a crown bud with safety, is often asked. This will vary with varieties and localities. Here in New Jersey we are safe after August 20 in taking buds of any varieties except a few late kinds that I will enumerate shortly. This date is for the great bulk of the varieties. Some of the earlier kinds, like Monrovia, are taken as early as August 1. It is impossible to get the plants all showing bud just the day you want them, but if a bud is showing August 12 to 15 it can be easily held for a week on the plant in a semi-dormant condition by permitting the side shoots to grow and pinching them at the first joint, gradually removing them altogether, in ten days to two weeks. It is not wise to remove all the shoots at once from around the bud, even if the date is not too early. By holding one shoot for a few days the sap is diverted from the tiny bud, until it begins to swell. Some exhibition growers take chances on buds as early as August 6 to 10 and come out all right, but they are at a much higher altitude than we are, and the average temperature is consequently much lower than on the plains. On the other hand, some growers in the middle west claim that they can do little with crown buds taken in August, as the air is much dryer and the buds shrivel instead of swelling. Personally, I think much of this could be overcome by copious spraying, making one's own atmosphere, as it were, but as I have no actual experience of the climate I merely suggest such a possibility.

I mentioned that there were some varieties that should not be taken on August crowns. A list of these is as follows: Col. Appleton, Mrs. Swinburne, Mrs. Geo. Beech, W. H. Chadwick, Yellow Chadwick, Jeanne Nonin, and the old Mand Dean. It is entirely possible that there are others.

From the second week in September onward these kinds may be taken with safety for the best results. Many of them come all right on August buds, but the petals are shorter and the flower not nearly so graceful. This is particularly true in the case of Appleton, which from an early bud produces a heavy flower, but it is short petaled, coarse and lumpy.

It is a good way, particularly where one is trying new kinds, to tie a label on certain plants, giving the time of taking the bud. This gives a certain record when the plant flowers as to which buds produced best results and is valuable as a guide for future years. It is impossible to carry such data in one's

FEEDING THE PLANTS.

Mulch.

The chrysanthemum is a gross feeder when well established, and from now on food may be applied in greater or less quantity, as the plants may need it.

A light mulch of rotted cow manure is very good, and a dusting of very fine bone applied to the beds before the manure is put on is even better. I say fine bone, because the time is too short for the plants to get very much benefit out of it if coarse bone is used. So get the bone flour, if you can. This mulch helps to keep the beds from drying out so rapidly and furnishes food, as it is gradually washed down into the soil. The best principle to follow in feeding is to give a little at a time, but give it often. A heavy dose of anything kills the feeding roots and does more harm than good. Plants in benches will run from eight to ten weeks after planting before any feeding will be necessary. By that time the beds should be full of roots and in a condition to stand fertilizers.

Chemical Fertilizers.

Chemical fertilizers, carefully used, are of great value in finishing the crop and much of the success of the best cultivators is due to their judicious use. I prefer nitrate of potash and sulphate of ammonia, these having given me the best head from year to year and a notebook is something almost every successful mum grower carries. CHARLES H. TOTTY.

ROI D'ITALIE.

Kindly let me know how to treat Roi d'Italie mum. What bud should be taken and when should I take it? This is my first experience with this variety. A. W.

The culture of Roi d'Italie presents no difficulties other than the ordinary ones of handling any variety. So far as the bud is concerned, take the first one you can now. It is perfectly safe and you cannot go wrong on it. Feed and water it as you do the rest of your plants and I see no reason why you results if used in alternate doses and in combination with liquid from natural manures. The proportion of chemical that I use is one pound in a fifty-gallon barrel of water. This proportion will harm nothing, but don't think that if one pound is good two pounds would be better and increase the amount. It is safe to say that more plants are spoiled by mistaken kindness than in any other way. Chemicals are odorless and tasteless when dissolved in water, and as they look so innocent, one is tempted to use more than he would otherwise.

A Variety of Foods.

I like to change from one thing to another, so that the plants have a change of diet constantly. I hold that the feeding system of a plant is on the same lines as the human system, and that a variety of foods will better supply the plant's needs than a surfeit of any one particular thing.

Liquid from natural manures may also be used too strong. A safe proportion is to use half a bushel of sheep or cow manure, putting this into a sack and letting it soak in fifty gallons of water for three or four days. Chicken or pigeon manure is very caustic in its action and should be used in much less proportion. A quarter of a bushel, instead of half a bushel, would be plenty to use.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

APHIS ON MUMS.

How much water, sulphuric acid and cyanide are required for fumigating for black aphid, without injuring the plants, in an even-span chrysanthemum house 28x180 feet, walls five feet high, twelve feet from floor to ridge?

The proportions for cyaniding are as follows: One pint of water, one pint of sulphuric acid and two and a half ounces of cyanide of potash to each 1,500 cubic feet of air space. Personally, I have never had to use it on mums, as I have always found tobacco dust sufficient for any insects that I have had to contend with.

PHILOSOPHY OF WHOLESALING.

[A paper by C. E. Meehan, read before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, September 3, 1907.]

It has been suggested by a friend that I call this short paper by the above title. I am rather in doubt as to the amount of philosophy contained herein, but, nevertheless, we will let the title stand.

The wholesale florist has, I believe, done more for the advancement of the flower business in general than any other branch of the florists' business. He has been the outlet for the enormous quantities of cut flowers which have been coming to our large cities and which could not be disposed of, in many instances, if it were not for him. It is his business to hunt for business wherever he can find it, whether it be in his home town or whether it is 1,000 or more miles away. He has created markets for cut flowers and plants that would have been impossible but for his push and energy. His relations to both growers and retailers are of a peculiar character. I have often heard it said that he is "between the devil and the deep sea," and I think this is, in a measure, true, as he has a hard time to please both parties. If flowers do not bring as much as the growers think they should, he hears about it, and if they bring good prices, the retailer calls him a robber and other names of like nature, or worse.

What the Grower Has Gained.

Now, let us take up this matter from the standpoint of what the grower has gained. In the first place, I think it must be generally admitted that under ally been adopted and at this time I cannot recall in our city a single instance of a grower who, having once tried the wholesaler, has gone back to his former ways. This, it would seem to me, is fairly good evidence that it must be satisfactory to those who try it.

The reasons for this are many. In the first place, where a man may be the finest kind of a grower, he may be the poorest kind of a salesman. Also, as before stated, there are so many flowers grown around the larger centers, they could not possibly be consumed, but have to go to other points. The wholesaler has created markets and business by his up-to-date methods; he has careful men to handle and pack the stock, storage boxes in which to keep the stock in good condition, proper boxes to pack in, telephones, a place of business close to railroads and express companies, and, in fact, has worked and developed his business until today he is indispensable. He, however, cannot do business unless he has the stock to do it with, which means he must give his growers satisfaction.

I believe if the growers would see their wholesaler more often, see how their stock arrived from the express company, how it is handled, etc., and keep in closer touch with the wholesaler, it would be to their advantage, as many times flowers which are in seemingly good condition when shipped arrive in bad condition, due to improper packing and other causes which could be remedied, and it does seem too bad that in a few short hours all the work and trouble which has been taken to produce good stock should go for naught, simply for the want of proper packing, cutting or keeping. Therefore, I say again, Mr. Grower, keep in close touch with your wholesaler.

Specialization Pays.

I also believe in these times of specialization that it will pay the good grower to grow what he can grow best in quantity rather than to grow a number of things indifferently. Get the opinion of your wholesaler on this. He can do better for you if you have a large quantity of first-class stock rather than a number of small lots of poorer stock. I think this is generally recognized by growers, although some of them still send all kinds to the wholesalers and expect the same results as the man who sends good stock.

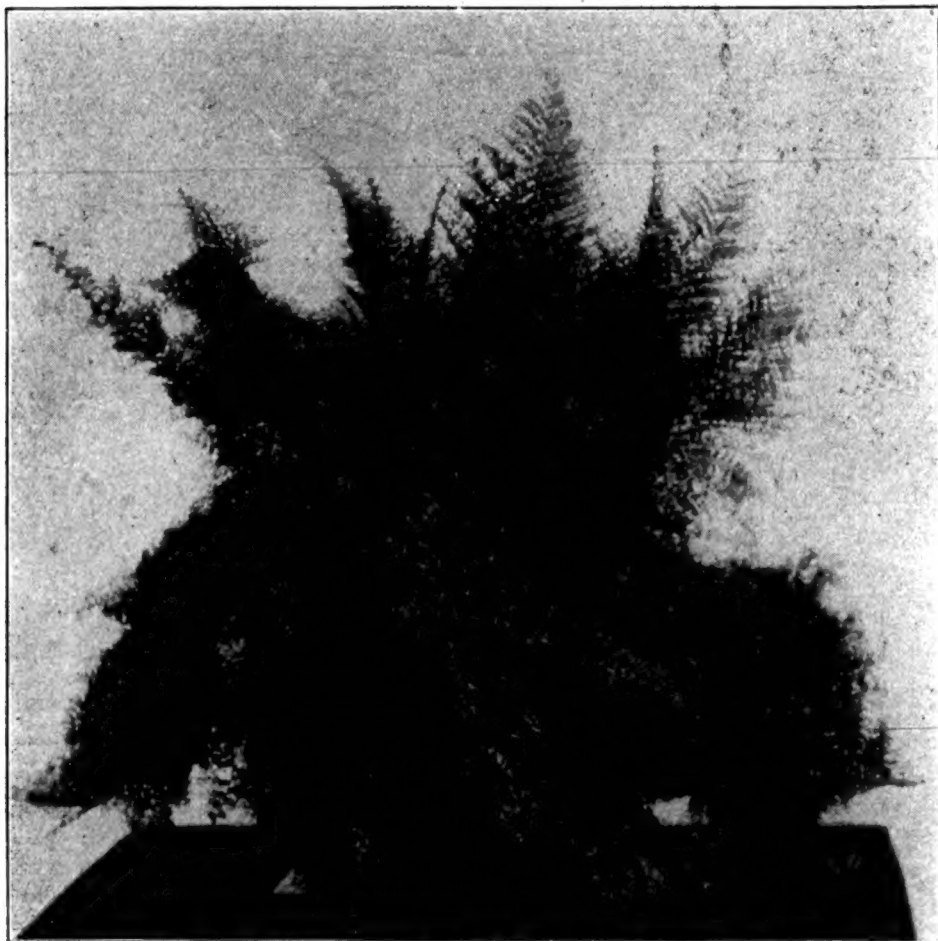

It is often said by retailers that the price of flowers is so much higher than it used to be, but do they take into consideration that the quality is just as much better? A wholesaler cannot sell the fine, long-stemmed stock of today at the price of ten years ago for short-stemmed stock and please his growers.

In this connection I want to say that the wholesaler is accused unjustly many times of raising prices unnecessarily, but do his accusers ever stop to think that the law of supply and demand does more to control prices than any wholesaler or combination of wholesalers?

One trouble with a great many of the wholesale man's customers is that they want to be both buyer and seller. I might also say a word in this connection about the retailer who takes advantage of a falling market by not dropping his prices, but that would not be pertinent to the subject, perhaps.

Advantages for Retailers.

I said, in speaking of the growers, that a wholesaler could not do business unless he has the stock to do it with, nor could he do business if he had no customers to whom to sell. I do not believe the retail-present conditions there is only one right way to sell flowers and that is through the wholesaler.

Years ago all the flowers that came to this city were sold direct by the grower to the store men. This was a satisfactory way at that time, but would never do under present conditions. Other and more satisfactory methods have graduers are using the wholesaler to the same advantage in our city as is done in some other big cities. What I mean is this: The wholesaler has a large stock of flowers on hand usually early in the morning. Now, it seems to me, if the retailers were to come or send their buyer to market they would do much better for themselves than by ordering some of this or some of that, several times during the day. Think of the variety he would have to select from. And then, too, he would oftentimes be able to pick up lots of certain stock at better figures than if he bought only a small quantity. The wholesaler in selling a big quantity at once would also be able to make better returns to his growers than if the stock were sold in small quantities and picked over, thereby losing value.

The Retailers' Obligations.

It seems to me that the retailers generally expect a great deal more from the wholesaler than they ought to do. I am not speaking altogether of service, but I do think that after the wholesaler has used his best efforts to serve his customer for a month, oftentimes procuring and delivering stock at a loss, it is up to the retailer to meet his bills promptly. I know this to be a sore subject generally among wholesalers, but I think our business has grown to such proportions that the same or better business methods should be as effective in the florist business as they are in others. The wholesaler pays his growers once a month, some twice a month and some weekly, and in order to do this he has to collect his accounts on time.

I think it pays the wholesaler to cultivate as close business relations with his customers as possible; try to give the best stock and service procurable, and in return the retailer should do his part and show his appreciation of what has been done for him by the wholesaler.

In conclusion I want to say that my experience in the wholesale business has been recently acquired, and perhaps I will know more and talk less ten years hence. I can speak with some authority from the grower's standpoint, as I have had considerable experience in this line, and also a little in the retail line, so that I have had some opportunity to gather ideas from all sides.

CONFERENCE ON HARDINESS.

Leonard Barron, secretary, has sent out the preliminary program for the International Conference on Plant Hardiness and Acclimatization to be held October 1 to 3, under the auspices of the Horticultural Society of New York, in the rooms of the American Institute and in the Museum building of the New York Botanical Garden. The list of those who will contribute papers includes the names of many eminent men, although nearly all are scientists rather than practical plantmen. The widest possible scope is to be given to the conference and the committee states that it will welcome promises of other titles or suggestions from people who are interested. Communications should be addressed to the secretary. It is planned to publish in one volume a complete report of the proceedings, which should be an important contribution to the literature of horticultural research.

CONGRESS OF HORTICULTURE.

The week of September 23-27, 1907, is to be an important one, horticulturally, at the Jamestown Exposition. In addition to the regular meetings of the American Pomological Society, American Nut Growers' Association, the Society for Horticultural Science and the Federation of Horticultural Societies, arrangements have been made for a Congress of Horticulture to consider topics of a general character covering the various branches of horticulture. This congress was arranged for by the National Council of Horticulture upon invitation of the authorities of the Exposition Company and of the Norfolk Horticultural and Pomological Society.

In view of the fact that the regular biennial session of the Pomological Society occurs the same week, all strictly pomological subjects are omitted from the program of the congress.

The topics are to be treated in a general way and the aim will be to show the present status of our actual knowledge of these subjects and to point out just where we stand in the various branches in a manner that will be of interest to horticulturists generally. It is hoped that these meetings will be the means of bringing the more or less scattered branches into closer union, of adding inspiration and profit to all participants and others who may be present and of dignifying and advancing horticulture in all of its branches.

It is earnestly hoped that the attendance will be commensurate with the interests involved. The following is the program:

First session, J. H. Hale, chairman, South Glastonbury, Conn.

(a) Cultural Problems: "Soils," Professor F. H. King, Madison, Wis.; "Plant Diseases," Dr. A. F. Woods, Washington, D. C.; "Insect Enemies," A. L. Quaintance, Washington, D. C.

(b) Breeding and Propagation: "Horticultural Variation," Dr. H. J. Webber, Ithaca, N. Y.; "Principles of Seed Growing," J. Otto Thillow, Philadelphia, Pa.; "Vegetables," Dr. Walter Van Fleet, New York, N. Y.; "Ornamental Woody Plants," N. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; "Florists' Flowers," W. N. Rudd, Mt. Greenwood, Ill.

Second session, Prof. B. Green, chairman, St. Anthony Park, Minn.

(a) Commercial Growing: "Nuts," Prof. W. A. Taylor, Washington, D. C.; "Garden Vegetables," W. W. Rawson, Boston, Mass.; "Ornamental Plants," Wm. H. Taplin, Flatbush, N. Y.; "Cut Flowers," F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y.; "Forest Trees," Prof. F. W. Rane, Boston, Mass.

(b) Local Horticultural Conditions, by Professor W. T. Macoun, Ottawa, Canada; John K. M. L. Farquhar, Boston, Mass.; L. A. Goodman, Kansas City, Mo.; Prof. E. J. Wickson, Berkeley, Cal.; Prof. F. H. Burnette, Baton Rouge, La.

Third session, Prof. S. A. Beach, chairman, Ames, Ia.

"Civic Horticulture," Warren Manning, Boston, Mass.

"Our National Forests," W. L. Hall, Washington, D. C.

"Landscape Gardening," John C. Olmsted, Brooklyn, Mass.

"Schools and Experiment Stations," Dr. A. C. True, Washington, D. C.

"Horticultural Press," Leonard Barron, New York, N. Y.

"Government Aid," Dr. B. T. Galloway, Washington, D. C.

"Federation and Co-operation," J. C. Vaughan, Chicago, Ill.

MEALY BUG ON PALMS.

Will you kindly tell me what I shall do for my palms, which are covered with the white mealy bug? They are thick down near the roots of the plants. Do you suggest ammonia water for it?

C. F. S.

The fact that the bug is so thick on your palms goes to show that they have been insufficiently syringed. There is no better antidote for mealy bug, and a number of other pests, than cold water from the hose, used with a good pressure. This, if properly applied, should make it about impossible for this pest to secure a foothold. In order to clean the plants, stand them out separately where you can reach them with the hose. Attach a brass spray-nozzle to the same, lay the plants on their sides and direct the water so as to cover every vestige of leaf and stem. If properly done, it should wash off all the bugs. Keep the plants freely syringed in future and the bug will not trouble you.

If you wish to use some insecticide to kill the bug, try kerosene emulsion, or one of the nicotine extracts, using them of treble the strength recommended for aphids. I should not use ammonia water. If applied powerful enough to hurt the pests, it would seriously injure the plants. C. W.

CANADIAN

FLORISTS MEET

THE LONDON CONVENTION.

Papers and Discussions.

The tenth annual convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association opened in the Board of Trade building, London, Wednesday, August 28, with a good attendance of florists from all over Ontario, with representatives from Winnipeg, in the west, to Montreal, in the east. Mayor Judd welcomed the association on behalf of the city, and on behalf of the Board of Trade Vice-President A. T. McMahan extended a hearty welcome.

In the absence of J. H. Dunlop, who was to respond, J. A. Campbell, of Simcoe, replied on behalf of the association, thanking the mayor and Mr. McMahan for their welcome and assuring them that by no means would we be at all backward in taking advantage of the city's hospitality.

President W. J. Lawrence, of Eglinton, next addressed the delegates. After calling attention to the advances made by the association in the last few years, he said he hoped all would take a deep interest in the proceedings of the convention. He commented favorably upon the decided improvements which have been made in the construction of greenhouses with regard to light, durability and strength. He said that during the last year the association had flourished in a manner satisfactory to all. In conclusion, he suggested that a uniform price for all plants and flowers be established.

The secretary's and treasurer's reports were read, giving a favorable report of the advance made during the year and showing the rapid strides that the association had made since its inaugural meeting in London some five years ago.

A paper on "Experience with Lilies for the Easter Trade" was read by A. Gilchrist, of Toronto Junction. He emphasized the fact that it is important to have the lilies on the market in due time for the Easter trade, otherwise the greatest share of the profit is lost. He attributed his own success in growing lilies to a command of temperature at all times, which would always produce the desired results and have the lilies ready for market in ample time.

After adjournment the delegates took a special car to visit the establishment of J. Gammage & Son, and there were treated to the hospitality for which this firm is well known. The firm's new range of greenhouses, planted in carnations, is in fine condition. Their stock of palms, ferns, etc., is all in nice shape.

In the absence of T. W. Duggan, of the Dale estate, Brampton, the treasurer, Mr. Simmers, read Mr. Duggan's paper on "Up-to-Date Methods" at the evening session.

"Plants Versus Flowers for Holiday Trade" was a paper written by Thomas Manton, of Eglinton, which dealt fully with the question, and drew a distinction between the smaller and the larger cities, considering that cut flowers had a larger demand in the smaller cities, while plants were rapidly taking the lead in the larger places.

F. R. Pierson's paper on "Greenhouse Construction" was given at this session, as Mr. Pierson wished to get home. This paper was discussed at some length by Mr. King, Mr. Fendly and others, bringing out many of the points touched upon by Mr. Pierson and giving him a chance to explain more fully why he favored the single wide house to the block system.

Thursday morning a number of the delegates went up to visit the establishment of F. Dicks, London, and were much pleased with the general appearance of everything.

The first item of business on Thursday was the reading of a paper written by Mr. McHugh, of Dorval, Que., on "How to Grow Exhibition Flowers of Chrysanthemums." This paper was read by Mr. Simmers, in the absence of the writer.

After a brief discussion the paper "What Is the Best Way to Appease the Voracity of the Storeman for Greens?" was read by D. J. Sinclair, of Toronto. After explaining what the term "greens" implied, the writer went on to show that the cold-storage system had made it possible to successfully carry southern greens throughout the whole season. He thought it better to establish a system, so that the prices of greens might remain uniform. This paper was discussed at much length from both the retail and wholesale standpoint.

"Wholesalers Retailing, from a Retail Standpoint," by A. E. Moore, of Toronto, caused a great deal of discussion that brought out many different opinions. The wholesalers were attacked for selling retail at wholesale prices. The morning session was concluded with William Gammage's paper on "What Is the Best Way to Get the Cost of Production of Greenhouse Stock?" Many of the members considered that his paper took a very advanced stand in estimating values of bench space. It was pointed out that in other lines of business that are as complicated as the greenhouse business, systems of keeping the exact account of cost have been inaugurated, and there is no doubt but that in a short time book-keeping systems can be put into greenhouse work whereby the exact cost of each plant can be arrived at and that the grower will know what is paying and what is not paying.

After the morning session the delegates were entertained by the London Horticultural Association, and after a trolley ride around the city were luncheoned, photographed and listened to some good songs by W. J. Lawrence and speeches by different members. At the luncheon the president was presented, on behalf of the association, with a cut-glass berry bowl and water jug. The presentation was made by Mr. Manton, who considered it was particularly appropriate, as Mr. Lawrence is a teetotaler.

The election of officers was held, so as to save time at the evening session. This resulted as follows: President, John Walsh, Montreal; first vice-president, E. Annandale, Toronto; secretary, A. H. Ewing, Woodstock; treasurer, H. Simmers, Toronto; executive committee, elected for three years, Messrs. Philpott, Connor and Hunt; for two years, Mr. Fraser, F. Dicks, W. Kehoe; one year, J. Suckling, J. Eddy, J. Campbell; representative to Toronto exhibition, H. Simmers; representatives to western fair, W. Gammage and F. Dicks; representatives to Ottawa, E. J. Mepstead and R. Wright.

A great deal of discussion was precipitated on selecting the next place of meeting. On account of the S. A. F. having selected Niagara Falls for next year it was decided to meet there also.

At the evening session the first paper was one written by Charles Chambers, assistant park commissioner of Toronto, on "How to Make a Flower Show Most Attractive to the General Public and of Most Benefit to the Trade." This paper was discussed at some length, especially the part referring to competition and judging.

One of the best papers of the convention was that read by F. C. Brown, of the Rosery, Toronto, on "Up-to-Date Retail Management." A general discussion ensued, in which the work of the convention was reviewed by the different delegates. After a lengthy discussion a motion was made to have a committee appointed, naming J. H. Dunlop, J. W. Lawrence, Thomas Manton, H. Simmers and E. Dale, to wait upon the government to have a census of the florist industry of Ontario taken to ascertain the amount of glass, the number of men employed, the capital invested and the yearly sales. It was also moved that a like committee be appointed to wait upon the Quebec government, it being considered that Ontario and Quebec are the principal provinces in the flower line, that we might get a census quicker by approaching the provincial governments, and with these figures get the federal government to get us the complete Dominion.

Trade Exhibit.

The trade exhibit was large and included several interesting exhibits from the United States. Following is the judges' report:

W. P. Craig, Philadelphia, Nephrolepis Amerpohlii, the finest of all the sports of recent years; certificate of merit.

J. Gammage & Sons, London, a commercial lot of clean, well-grown plants; certificate of merit. A unique exhibit of birchbark designs for florists; highly recommended.

Campbell Bros., Simcoe, Ont., gladioli for florists' use; light pink, scarlet; exceptionally fine flowers; highly commended.

W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J., collection of mostly new plants. Dracæna Mandaiana especially fine; seems to be commercial plant; certificate of merit. Variegated privet, would be useful for decorative work. Acacia sumerifolia, useful for the florist; highly commended.

I. P. Doolittle, Toronto, hose couplers; highly commended.

F. Cheesman, London, "Uneda" telephone roll; new and handy device.

Darch & Hunter Seed Co., London, floral designs, cut flowers, ferns, palms, etc.; good commercial exhibit.

King Construction Co., Toronto, some new improvements in their construction; certificate of merit.

H. G. Dilleuth, Toronto, commercial, well-grown plants; highly commended.

F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., Nephrolepis Superbissima, wonderful sport from Nephrolepis Piersoni; certificate of merit.

D. J. Sinclair, Toronto, new, rare, well-made designs; unique basket designs; diploma.

Foster Pottery Co., Hamilton, Ont., a splendid quality of flower pots; certificate of merit.

The delegates were all unanimous in expressing the opinion that the London convention was the best we have had from point of interest and from the very wide range of valuable information imparted from the papers and discussions, and all returned home feeling that the time had been well spent. LILIES FOR EASTER.

[A paper by A. Gilchrist, of Toronto, read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, in convention at London, Ont., August 29, 1907.]

Be on time with your Easter lilies. It is just as important to be on time with your lilies as it is to catch the last train for the convention. A few days late with your lilies and all the profits of the Easter season are gone. You may try to persuade yourself that the weather or the bulbs, or something else, is the matter, but remember the man is the main factor in the affair. Do not depend on luck to bring your lilies into bloom. Some of you will doubtless remember the old rhymster who tried to make poetry out of this, and it turned out to be philosophy. Perhaps it is worth repeating here. What he had to say might save you a world of trouble in other matters than lily forcing. He said:

"Luck is pluck, with your sleeves rolled up, working to make it come out. Bad luck is sitting on a stump, with a pipe in your mouth, waiting till it comes out."

Importance of Being on Time.

This matter of lily forcing for Easter has been treated so often by practical men, and in so great a variety of ways, that I cannot add anything new to the subject. However, as I understand I am expected to tell my experience, I may state the case squarely. My experience differs little from that of other growers. I have been uniformly successful since I started to grow lilies, in having them in on time for Easter, not missing one season. I attribute my success to care and to having a command of temperature, in different houses, carrying them from house to house, so that they may be all in on time, keeping in mind the fact of $10 to $12 per 100 blooms, or after Easter $3 to $5 per 100; a profit or loss in the season's crop.

In leaving your lilies in one temperature there will be from one to six weeks' difference in time of flowering. To have them all come in on time requires constant care and attention, and, if there is more work attached to removing them from house to house, yet "Happy is the man who takes pleasure in his work."

Importance of True Stock.

How to procure good bulbs is a more difficult problem than the growing of them. Bermudian Harrisii were at one time all that could be desired. But, alas, greed and cupidity have destroyed the business. The last lot of Harrisii bulbs I bought were only about five per cent Harrisii; the rest were a poor quality of diseased longiflorums. I have given up Bermuda stock altogether and depend on Japan bulbs. Here, again, the ordinary longiflorum is generally a mixed lot.

Various Types of Bulbs.

For convenience I will classify the different types: No. 1, short, narrow leaves and more floriferous than the other types, really the only type worth growing. No. 2, long, broad leaves with few flowers; not profitable. No. 3, leaves incurved, dwarf, few or no flowers; as soon as I detect this sort I dump them on the rubbish heap, for it does not pay to give them room in the house. The multiflorum, if you can be sure of getting them true, is really the best, but I have been disappointed again and again in purchasing this variety. I have ordered from very reliable men, but they are helpless in the hands of the growers, who are entirely to blame.

The Azore lily bulbs have proved more reliable and comparatively free from disease, much easier to force. The only fault they have is not producing enough flowers to the bulb. No doubt this might be remedied by careful selection.

It is a question in my mind if it would not be more profitable to use storage bulbs. They could be more easily forced and produce better results, with the assurance of getting them in on time. The dealers now have the storage of bulbs down to a science.

Home-grown Bulbs.

The next question that should arise is, could the bulbs not be grown profitably in some part of our own country? If they could be ripened properly it would be of less importance to secure them early. No doubt some soil and climate could be found within the bounds of our own country. Then we should not have to go so far afield as 7,000 miles for our stock. Even if the bulbs cost more money to grow in our own country, we might be reasonably sure of getting what we purchase. The experiment stations should take up this work and, if successful, and a proper location found, capital and experience would soon take hold and make it a success, and a great benefit would accrue to the trade. A few more flowers to the plant would make it more profitable to the florist and that is the line most to be desired.

Cultural Methods.

My mode of culture differs little from that of other growers, so it is not necessary to take up valuable time describing what all already know, but I will state in as few words as possible some of the distinct features of culture: Have your soil prepared in summer, that it may be in good condition for potting when your bulbs arrive. Do not delay potting one hour after their arrival. Have good loam, four or five parts to one part of well rotted manure, according as the loam is rich or poor. I put 7 to 9-inch bulbs in 4-inch pots, shifting after they are four or five inches high and well rooted. After potting, put them into a violet temperature. In this northern locality it is not worth while putting them outside, for it soon becomes too cold to make quick root action. I prefer keeping them very dry; they make stronger and better root. As soon as well rooted, gradually raise the temperature to 65 or 70 degrees. If buds are showing four weeks before Easter they will be in time, but it is safer to have your buds showing five or six weeks previous to Easter. Japan bulbs require hard forcing to get them in, especially if Easter is early.

It is much easier to grow lilies than tell how to do it in a short convention paper. I cannot go into all the minute details of culture. Good judgment and experience are absolutely necessary. Taking into consideration the vagaries of the weather and the change of date of Easter, lily growing is no sinecure. The public is able and willing to pay good prices and there is no reason why the florist should not have a fair remuneration for his labor. Do not get stampeded into the belief that lilies are too plentiful; the last few days before Easter will clean them all out.

Someone had the audacity to say that florists are not business men. That may apply to the growers, but not to the store men, some of whom I am sure would make a success on Wall street.

idly and, if not checked, will entirely destroy the crop.

Pinch off all affected leaves and burn them. Syringe twice a week with the copper solution—carbonate of copper, three ounces; liquid ammonia, one quart; water, fifty gallons. Use a very fine spray and see that the whole surface of the leaf, upper and under sides, gets thoroughly washed. This spraying should be continued on the stock plants during winter and in the mum house, so that the disease may be killed before next planting time.

The roses are affected with the leaf spot fungus and should get almost the same treatment chemically as the chrysanthemums. As there is also a trace of burning on the rose leaves, evidently produced by some substance used as a spray, this ought to be discontinued or used in a weaker form. RIBES.

CARRIED OVER ROSES.

I have never carried roses over till this year. On the side benches the cut back canes are, in some cases, only two feet from the glass. Is it necessary to tie them down? They have begun to grow and the tying ought to be done at once if necessary. C. A. M.

Where the glass is only two feet removed from the bench there is not sufficient head room for carried over roses of the varieties you grow. To get the best of the situation, the wood should be bent over at right angles at about six inches from the ground. This should be done at once and all small blind wood should be removed. As soon as growth commences, give a mulch of about one inch in depth. Syringe twice a day during bright weather and keep the new growth tied up. RIBES.

ROSES AS BEDDING STOCK.

Kindly inform me as to what kind of winter care I should give to Bride, Bridesmaid, Uncle John and Richmond when used as outdoor bedding roses in summer. L. R. K.

This class of roses, when used entirely for bedding purposes, should, if wanted to stay in the beds, be mulched immediately after the first frost. This mulch should be spaded in in April. This is usually all the care required.

A very successful way to treat these roses is to lift them as soon as they shed their leaves and heel them in in a coldframe or pit, well protected. As soon as the winter is past they should be brought out, potted and started, and as soon as the weather is favorable they should be planted out. RIBES.

THE LARGEST GREENHOUSE.

The accompanying illustration is from the latest photograph of the mammoth greenhouse recently completed at the Florex Gardens, North Wales, Pa. The house is 156 feet wide and 575 feet long. It is of truss construction, but the roof is supported by six rows of posts. The ridge is thirty-two feet high and, as is shown in the illustration, the heating pipes are next the glass. The house now contains 45,000 Beauty plants, from the earliest planted second-year stock, the first flowers having been cut during convention week. Half the stock is in ground beds and half on tables.

FUMIGATING FOR GREENFLY.

With the longer and cooler nights greenfly will be certain to make its appearance. Whilst this is one of the most annoying and persistent enemies of the rose-grower, it is also one of the easiest to control and any one who gives its habits a close study need be in no fear of its ravages. Tobacco in its various forms is the most effective remedy known. For roses which are in bud or bloom vaporizing or fumigating are the safest and most effective.

To derive the greatest benefit from fumigating at this season it should be done in the morning before sunrise, immediately after the morning's cut is taken. At that time evaporation is at its minimum, the glass is cool and the soil is comparatively dry, which allows the vapor or fumes to settle closer to the soil and to cling closer to the leaves and stems than if the work was performed in the evening.

By keeping the ventilators closed for twenty minutes or half an hour the fumes will have done their work, when syringing can be proceeded with. The ventilation required during the day will dissipate the odor of the tobacco before it is time to take the evening cut.

Fumigating, when done in the evening, is apt to leave a disagreeable stale smell on the morning cut which is very noticeable after the flowers have been packed and shipped a distance. The water from the syringe seems to cling more tenaciously to the leaves, giving them a wet and bedraggled appearance which is absent after a morning fumigation.

A system of periodical fumigating should be adopted and strictly adhered to, once a week being sufficient to keep the pest in subjection.

If fumigation is deferred until the fly becomes so numerous as to injure the buds the amount required to effect the purpose will be apt to destroy the luster of the petals.

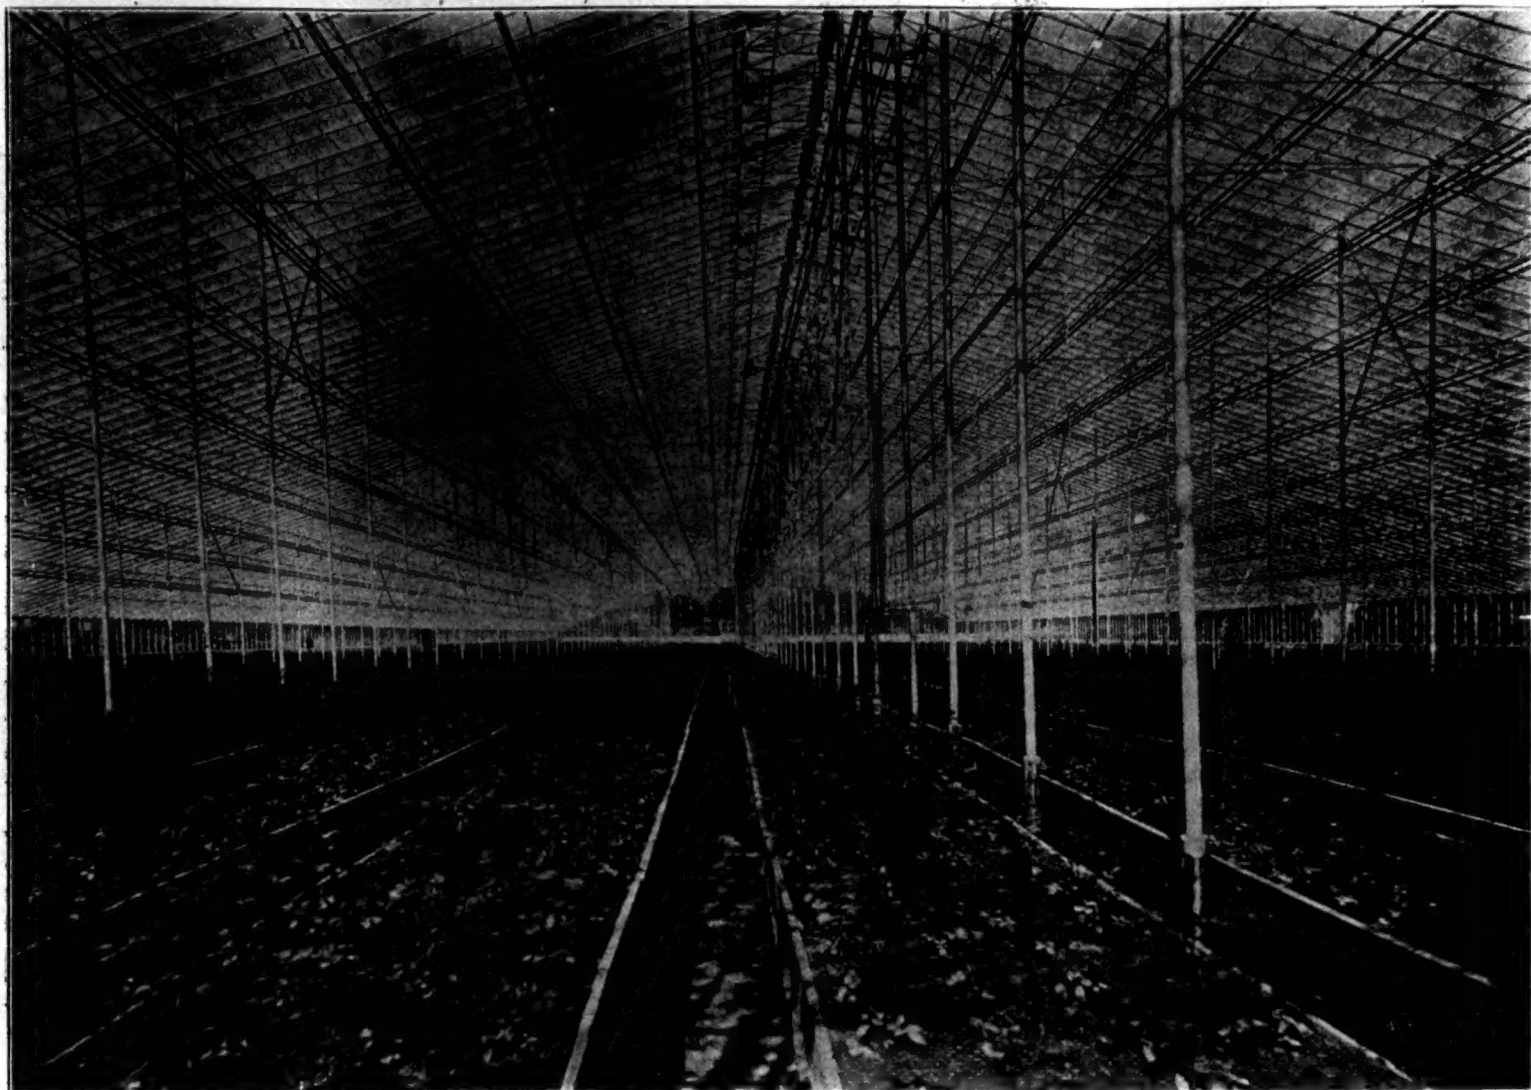

The coloring of such varieties as Richmonds, Beauties, Maids and Chatenay will also lose its intensity. RIBES.

LEAF SPOT.

I inclose some rose leaves. Will you kindly let me know what the trouble is and how to overcome it?

I also inclose a chrysanthemum leaf, taken from a Touse. The under side is whitish. C. A. M.

house and will watch closely the results obtained from it. The average rose grower feels that the ventilation in a house of this width, and with no sash except at the ridge, is less than he would want, especially for Beauties. The height of the house certainly makes for the easy control of the temperature, although the arrangement of heating pipes is novel. As the photograph shows, the interior of the house gives the appearance of a circus tent, with its forest of supports and its many lines of pipes beneath the glass. It is understood the proprietors of this remarkable house are now considering the provision of side ventilation.

GREENHOUSE CONSTRUCTION.

[A paper by F. R. Pierson, of Tarrytown, N. Y., read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, in convention at London, Ont., August 29, 1907.]

The question as to the best style of greenhouse construction is a most important one. As our business has widened and developed, the necessity for increased facilities has arisen, as in other mercantile lines. The ocean steamers of twenty years ago bear about the same relation to the leviathans that are now being built, as the small greenhouses of twenty years ago bear to the large structures that are now being erected, any one of which is as large and covers as much ground as was covered formerly by an entire establishment composed of eight, ten or more houses. In the earlier days of our business a number of houses was not only desirable, but necessary. In our business, however, as in other branches of trade, we are fast becoming specialists, growing one kind of flower or plant and these in immense quantities. As conditions have changed, the size of the buildings has naturally increased. Twenty years ago 11-foot houses were in the majority; then came the three-quarter span, eighteen to twenty feet in width. In fact, fifteen years ago, when we built a new range of four iron houses, each 20x300 feet, it was considered a model range and was much in advance of anything that had been built up to that time. Visitors came from everywhere to inspect it. But times have changed, and changed rapidly, and our first model range has been duplicated to such an extent in the meantime that it has long ago become commonplace. At that time, however, these light houses were much in advance of the houses in general use.

Ridge and Furrow Construction.

But as the business grew and the necessity for larger houses became apparent, what is now known as the ridge and furrow open construction was introduced. For economy in construction and the returns on the investment, these are undoubtedly more economical and profitable than the 20-foot, separate, east and west construction. This style has recently been greatly improved in details by the use of light iron gutters, by the increased height of the gutter line, by the use of larger glass, requiring fewer sashbars, and by the use of light trusses or posts, thus increasing the width of the houses. This improvement in details has resulted in an admirable structure, which is capable of indefinite extension, only limited by the quantity to be grown of one thing.

This style has many champions, and fine examples of it can be seen in the immense establishment at Brampton and in other Canadian cities, such as Toronto, Ottawa, etc. It has also been adopted very largely in the vicinity of Chicago, where immense ranges have been and are being built, and where roses and carnations are the crops.

Advantages of Single House.

I believe, however, that the old idea of single, separate houses, running east and west, and greatly enlarged in width, is preferable to the ridge and furrow type of house. Of course, I am speaking from the standpoint of the cut flower grower, to whom sunlight in the midwinter months of December, January and February is of especial importance. For plant growing, of course, especially palms and foliage plants, the ridge and furrow open construction is ideal, but for cut flower growing I consider the wide, separate, east and west houses immensely superior, as these houses certainly get much more sunlight, especially in the short midwinter days. In fact, this is where in their superiority exists, and as winter is the season of the year when flowers command the highest prices, it is of the utmost importance to the grower that he get every ray of sunlight that can possibly be secured. Such a season as we experienced last winter makes this doubly apparent.

The argument in favor of the ridge and furrow open construction has been that it costs less to build, and for the money expended the results obtained were in its favor, but by increasing the width of the east and west single house this advantage disappears. In contemplating a large addition to our establishment last year, I went into the comparative cost of the two styles and obtained estimates for exactly the same area, and while the single east and west house was the very best style of flat rafter steel construction and the ridge and furrow was of the semi-iron construction only, I found there was only six per cent difference on the total investment in favor of the ridge and furrow construction, a difference so small that the difference in one week's crop at the holidays might offset the entire extra cost.

Superior Ventilation.

With the question of cost settled, I think the advantages in favor of the single, wide, east and west house are unquestionable. Not only is much more sunlight obtained in the short, dark midwinter days when the sun is at its lowest meridian, but much more ventilation can be given. In fact, I have been surprised to see how much is necessary in the coldest midwinter weather, when other houses could be given little, if any. Of course, this superior ventilation adds to the general health of the plants, giving stronger stems and increasing the quantity of flowers. Take a dull, dark winter, such as last winter was, and the importance of this is better appreciated, for it is a well settled fact that the more air that can be given the better for the plants. It is then that the advantage of this type of house is seen at its best.

We get better ventilation in these houses in the summer also, as the side ventilation is a great advantage, making the houses airy and cool. Some have thought that these houses would be difficult to heat. On the contrary, they are much easier heated than the smaller and lower houses. It is not the volume of air that costs to heat; it is rather the amount of glass exposed to the outside air can be given in these houses in zero weather than can be given in the smaller and lower ones.

Cost of Operation.

So far as the cost of operation is concerned, I see no advantage in either. The single large house can be built as large as one needs, as large as there is any advantage in. We are building now fifty-six feet in width, but there is no reason why that cannot be greatly increased if one wishes—say seventy-five or even 100 feet in width, but, of course, the greater the width the higher the ridge would necessarily have to be. In commencing a new range several years ago, we started with a width of fifty-six feet, and will continue that for the present, principally for the sake of uniformity, as there is no other good reason for not increasing it; yet little would be gained, for we now get about all the economy in operation possible. The only advantage in greater width would be a possible very slight decrease in the cost of construction.

We have all been interested in the monster house erected this year at North Wales, Pa.—154 feet in width, I believe—and we admire the faith and enterprise of its projectors, but I fail to see any special advantage in such extreme size. In this case, in order to avoid the excessively high ridge a flat roof has resulted, which I consider most objectionable, both reasons for not building to such an extreme width.

Speaking From Experience.

In advocating the single wide house, I speak from experience, as we have several ranges of the most modern and perfected type of the ridge and furrow connected houses, as well as the large, wide, separate houses. We are now building the latter type of houses and believe fully and unqualifiedly that they are the best type, all things considered, for the cut flower grower. These light, steel, airy structures, with reinforced concrete sides, such as we are now building, eliminating all woodwork except the sashbars and ventilating sash, offer little or no obstruction to the light. It is really getting back to first principles and is following out the same principle that the market gardener, who is dependent on sunlight only, is compelled to observe in placing his coldframes. So I think all will agree with me that an east and west house, facing south, gets more sunlight than the connected ridge and furrow house.

There is an all too prevalent idea, even among florists, that the temperature or warmth is the necessary factor, but that this is not so is shown most conclusively in the dull winter days, when the growth becomes weak and the plants stop blooming. It is the province of the florists to aid nature, and the house that will admit the most sunlight, other things being equal, is the best style of structure.

THE CHRISTMAS SWEET PEAS.

History of the Strain.

Anton C. Zvolanek, of Bound Brook, N. J., has achieved an international fame through the strains of Christmas flowering sweet peas which he has developed. These have made their way all over the world and have given excellent results under glass on both continents. In the REVIEW of July 26, 1906, Mr. Zvolanek gave the story of the origination of these varieties and it has since created a vast amount of discussion, especially in England. The story of these sweet peas as Mr. Zvolanek tells it is in brief as follows:

"About twenty-five years ago I made my first experiments in raising sweet peas in winter under glass. I tried all varieties which were at that date obtainable, but could never raise a plant which would give flowers before the latter part of April. After several years of such experiments I came to the conclusion that it was impossible to get sweet peas earlier than the time mentioned, from the present varieties, so I started cross-fertilization with others, among them the lathyrus, but the first few years without success. I obtained several new varieties, a few of which were double-flowered, but I did not succeed in getting a free-flowering plant until I made a cross with the European vetch, largely grown on farms in central Europe as green fodder.

"About October, 1891, I sowed some of this seed which I had hybridized with the vetch, and the following January 1, 1892, I was surprised to find two little plants, each with one open flower and several buds. The flowers were very small, color a reddish-pink, and not of much value, the plants growing only to a height of twenty-four inches under glass. But I was satisfied with this for a start, and increased the seed all I possibly air, and there is little if any more exposure in these houses than in the connected ridge and furrow ones. In fact, the larger volume of air in these large houses cools more slowly and is subject to much less fluctuation. This large volume of air is also a reason why more on account of the liability of drip in rainy weather and also from the lodgment of snow in winter. The roof being so flat, I doubt if the snow would slide off readily. So, while I am an advocate of the single wide house, there are limitations to be reckoned with, and could. I crossed and re-crossed each year, and each new hybrid showed improvement over the previous one, in size of flower, color, length of stem, and in the plant itself. The first seedling of value which appeared was obtained from Blanche Ferry; it came of the same color, but the plant was only twenty inches high, under glass, and produced only about ten single flowers; but after much crossing and re-crossing with the parent variety, I secured fine, long-stemmed, large flowers, plants over six feet high, which were covered with masses of bloom all winter. The first sort was named Christmas Pink.

"I now have a large number of varieties in all existing colors. All these varieties, when grown under glass, begin to bloom when three to four feet high, and continue flowering all winter, sometimes until June."

Working Up Stock.

The stock of seeds has steadily been increased, but Mr. Zvolanek finds it necessary each year to grow his stock seed under glass as in the beginning, because the varieties quickly run out and revert to the ordinary types of spring flowering peas if not so handled. Last year he secured about forty pounds of stock seed in his greenhouses. This seed was planted in the Santa Clara valley in California and in a little valley in Austria, about ten miles from Trieste, where for an area perhaps two miles wide and ten miles long the climate is practically the same as that of the Santa Clara valley in California. If anything it is a trifle more favorable for the growing of sweet peas, because rain rarely falls during the flowering season. Mr. Zvolanek says that the reason he never could grow sweet pea seed outdoors at his home in New Jersey is that rain always fell during the flowering season and ruined the crop.

It is a peculiar fact Mr. Zvolanek has found that European growers of sweet peas for cut flowers will have none of this seed grown in Europe. They want the California product, and claim they get better results with the American seeds, but the seed grown in Austria is brought here and does excellently for forcing for Christmas flowers.

Mr. Zvolanek says he has frequent offers for his entire crop of seed, which this season he expects to be some 3,000 pounds. Every now and then some wholesale seedsman wants to buy it by the ton, but he prefers to continue handling it as heretofore, in packages direct by mail to the planters. He began sending these packets out several years ago and has steadily extended the circle of his customers—until now he has a list of 3,000 florists, not only in the United States, but covering practically every country in the world, who send to him direct for seeds each year.

Two Sweet Pea Houses.

In the accompanying illustrations the two interior views were taken at different dates. One of the pictures shows one of Mr. Zvolanek's houses of sweet peas at Christmas week in 1906. There are several varieties in the house, mostly lavender, salmon and blue. These were sown in the first part of September, in 5-inch pots, and were planted in the latter part of October, following a crop of the earliest chrysanthemums, which had held the houses up to that date. Because of the unusually dark weather of November and December the peas were later than usual and did not reach perfection for Christmas as usual.

The second interior view is another house of sweet peas photographed the week before Easter. These were from seeds sown about the middle of October, in 4-inch pots, and planted out in the first days of December, following a crop of late chrysanthemums. Cutting began about February 20 and a heavy crop was produced until June 10. Each of these greenhouses is 31x200, with side walls seven feet high. The peas are grown in solid beds, the compost being renewed once a year.

New Sorts.

Mr. Zvolanek began with only one variety, Christmas Pink, but he has now extended his list to include practically every color. Among the new sorts shortly to be introduced he considers Mrs. Wm. Sim and Mrs. George Lewis to be among the best. The Mrs. Sim is a salmon-pink self, a new color in sweet peas. This and another variety called Le Marquis, a large dark blue of the same shade as the Princess of Wales violet, will be sent out this season. The Mrs. Lewis is a white sort and because of a short crop of seed this year will not be sent out until 1908. The illustrations give an idea of the growth of these varieties.

A Word Biographically.

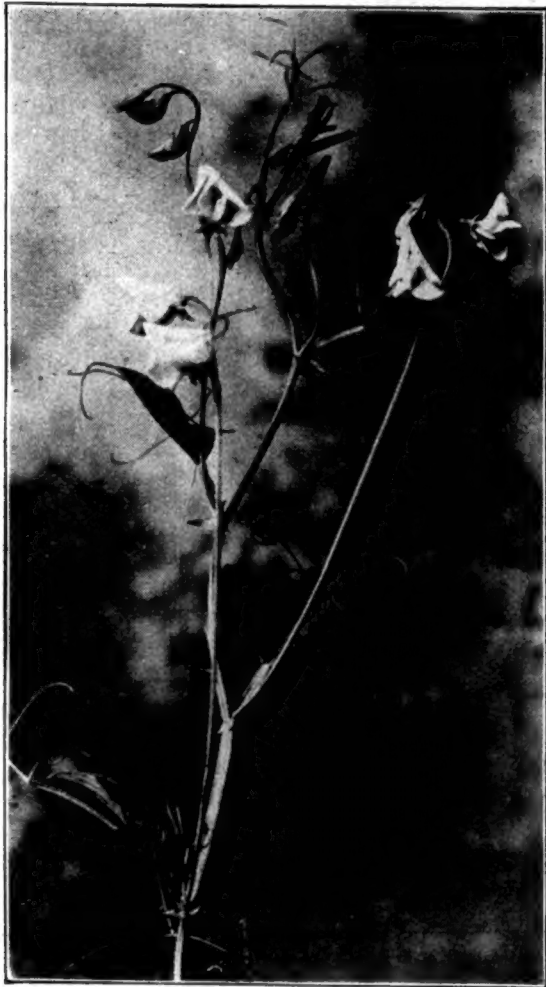

Anton C. Zvolanek landed in New York in 1888. He was born in Krusen-burk, Bohemia, Austria, September 13, 1862, and acquired a public school education prior to his thirteenth year, when he chose commercial floriculture as a profession. From that time to this he has been engaged in his chosen occupation, his experience embracing almost every department of the trade. For thirteen years he worked in leading European establishments, embracing practically every horticultural center except those in England, which country he never visited.

Arriving in New York, Mr. Zvolanek's first position was with W. C. Krick, in Brooklyn. Then he took charge of the greenhouses of Koge Bros., in West Hoboken, going from there to the establishment of Thomas Young, at Jersey City. After a time he returned to West Hoboken to work for Emil Leuly. In all these places roses, carnations and pot plants were the specialties, but in each establishment Mr. Zvolanek managed to reserve a corner for his favorite, the sweet pea, which he always had the faculty of growing especially well.

In 1890 he leased greenhouses in Grand View, which he conducted for fifteen years. In 1905 he built his present plant at Bound Brook, where he grows chrysanthemums and sweet peas for the New York market. This spring he made a trip to California, his first one to the west, to see his peas growing there and to acquaint himself also with the great seed-growing industry in the Santa Clara valley.

NATIONAL FLOWERS.

The United States has no national flower.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Show Pelargoniums.

Plants of show pelargoniums which have been on their sides, resting for a few weeks, will now have lost most of their foliage and the wood will be mostly of a brown, nutty color. These should now be pruned back to within two or three eyes of the previous year's growth, turned out of the pots and repotted into smaller receptacles. Shake away all the soil and cut back the long roots. If your plants have been in 6-inch pots they should go into 4-inch. If in 8-inch, they can be squeezed into 5-inch. Use a compost of fibrous loam, well rotted manure and sand. Pot firmly. Give one good watering, then keep on the dry side at the root until the plants start to break. Two or three light sprayings a day will be found helpful. The plants will do well in a coldframe for some weeks yet, and a light shade after repotting for a few days will be beneficial.

Cuttings inserted a few weeks ago ought now to be rooted and potted off. If you omitted putting any in, save the tops of the plants as you prune them. Even quite hard wood devoid of foliage will root, although it takes longer than soft, green wood with leaves. These cuttings can be grown into excellent 6-inch or 8-inch plants by spring and anyone doing a local retail trade can always dispose of a fair number.

Calceolarias.

With cooler nights calceolarias are making better growth. In the hot summer months they seem to make but little headway. Do not allow the plants to become crowded in the flats before potting. Green aphid is partial to both cinerarias and calceolarias and a layer of tobacco stems should be laid in the bottom of the frame. If renewed fortnightly it will keep this pest in check. A light compost of loam, leaf-mold, old rotted manure, with a dash of charcoal well powdered, and sand, makes a suitable compost. Pot the plants moderately loosely in the early stages, but firmer when they go into their flowering pots. Remove sashes to allow night dews to fall on the plants and look out for cabbage-worms, which are fond of the foliage and will quickly destroy the plants if given a free hand.

Cuttings of Calceolaria rugosa may now be put in sand in a cool house or coldframe. Kept well watered, they will be well rooted in about three weeks. There are several colors, but the yellow form, Golden Gem, is the best. Grown along in a cold house and flowered in 6-inch pots, it makes a beautiful decorative plant, being also well adapted for cutting. Plants may be raised from seeds if cuttings are not procurable. Calceolarias need a cold house at all times. Any coddling will quickly ruin them.

Dutch Bulbs.

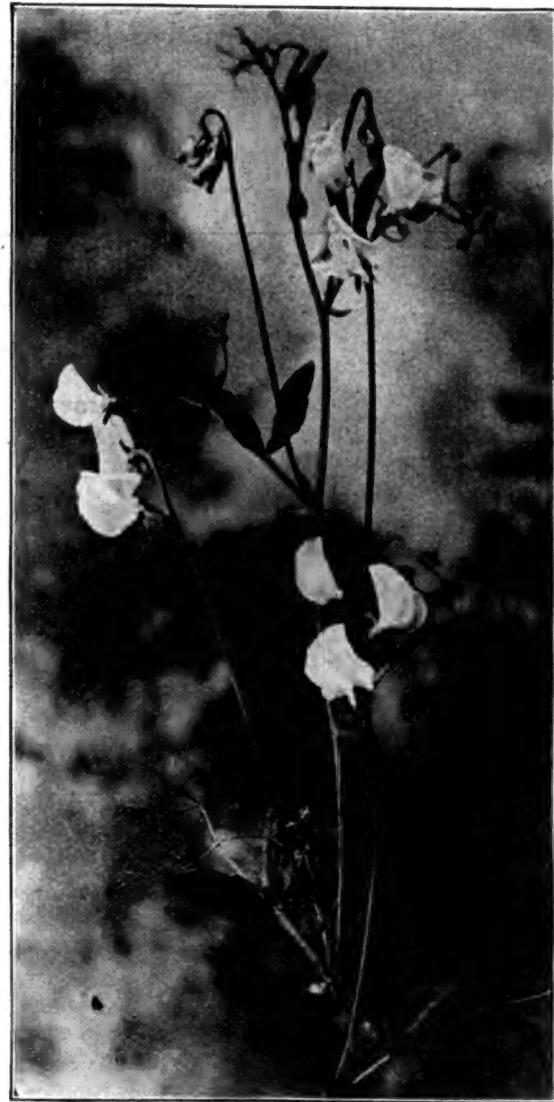

Early consignments of Dutch bulbs are coming to hand and are of extra good quality. A few sorts needed for early forcing should be gotten into flats without delay. La Reine, that most valuable of all forcing tulips, is one; Trumpet Major, or single Von Sion narcissus, is another. While it is possible to get a few of them in for Christmas, by hard forcing, we question if the quality and quantity of flowers obtained make it worth while. The dwarf Duc Von Tholl tulip, in several colors; may be had in bloom earlier than any other sort. They have short stems and have never attained any great popularity in America.

Flats containing four inches of soil will answer for any of the bulbs named. A light, moderately rich compost, one containing well pulverized old manure, is ideal, sand being added to give it porosity. For other varieties of Dutch bulbous stock there need be no immediate rush about getting the bulbs in the soil. Unpack the cases, however, and lay the bulbs in flats in a cool room until needed. Do not leave them tied up in the paper bags.

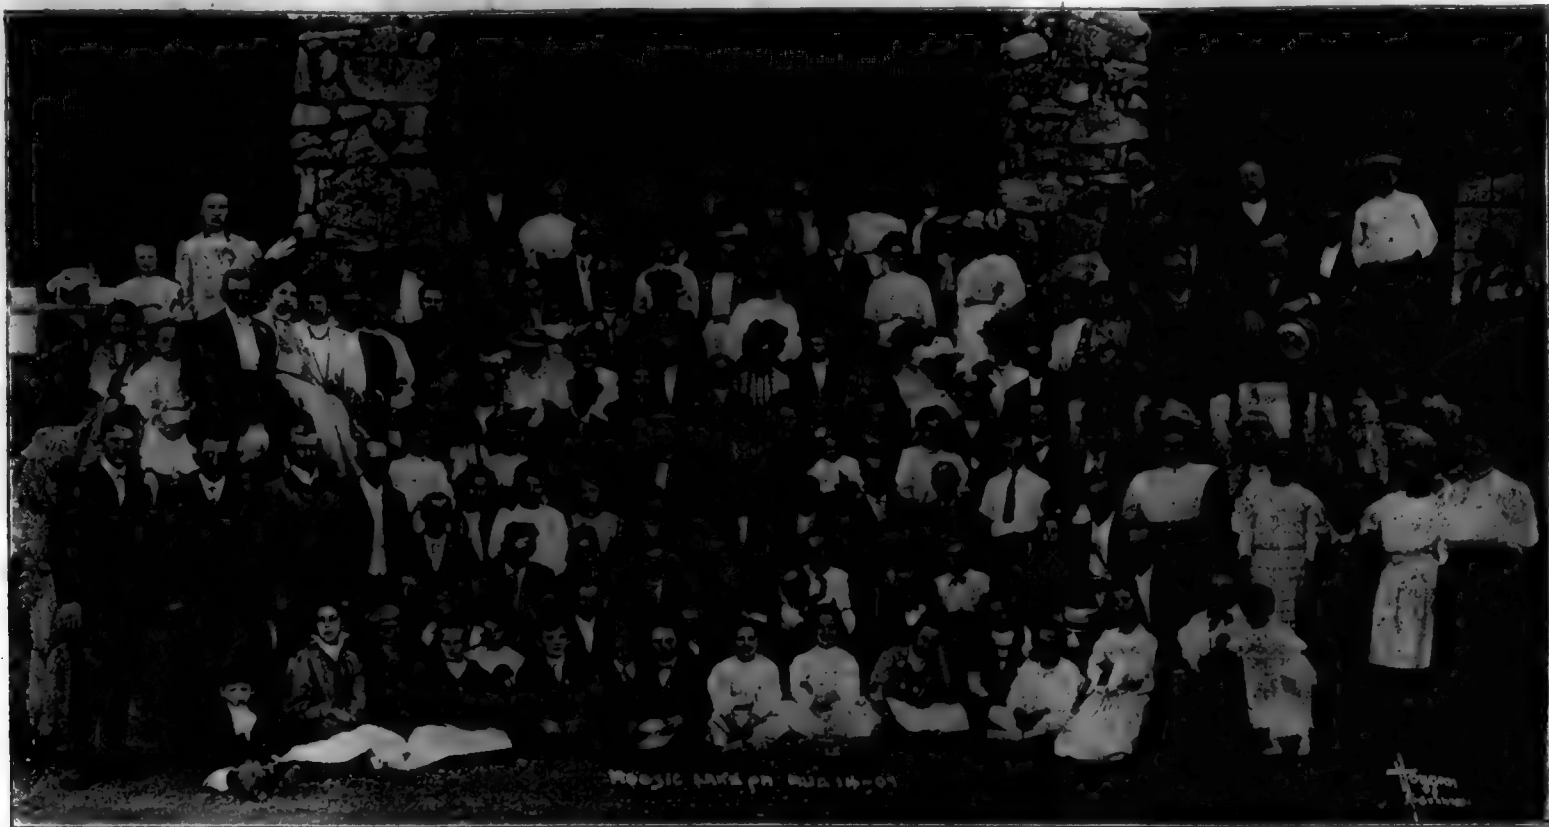

Lorraine Begonias.

Now is the time when the Begonia

Sweet Pea Mrs. Geo. Lewis.

Gloire de Lorraine is commencing to make rapid growth. In the hot summer months the plants appear to make but little headway, but in September they increase in size rapidly. Keep them moderately warm and close and pinch out the tops of the leading shoots to make the plants bushy, also removing all flowers. A light shade only is needed.

While Lorraines are best in a cool house when flowering, they do much better in a temperature of 60 degrees at night until the blooming season starts. Place in larger pans before the roots become matted. If plants are small, it is best to use several in a pan. Six-inch pans will grow fine plants of a useful size for retail trade, while 8-inch ones make handsome specimens. Lorraines like a light compost. One containing plenty of good leaf-mold and spent hot-bed manure seems exactly to their liking.

Cyclamens.

Cyclamens, like many other plants, take on additional vigor as the heated summer period wanes. The best place for them yet a while is in coldframes, where they can obtain an abundance of pure air and be shaded from the heat of the noonday sun. Sashes are better left off at night, unless heavy rain threatens. They can also be left off advantageously during the daytime when there is but little sun. Do not place the shadings over the frame too early in the morning and remove them not later than 4 o'clock in the afternoon. A little sun helps cyclamens and many other plants. It warms the pots and promotes root action. Many plants are half ruined by overshadowing, cyclamens being one of them.

Any plants not yet given their final shift should be attended to at once. From 4-inch they can go into 6-inch and from 5-inch into 7-inch. Some growers flower their stock in as small sizes as 4-inch and 5-inch pots, but such plants cannot hold a candle to the larger ones, no matter how carefully they may be fed.

Seed sown a few weeks ago is germinating nicely and paper covers have been removed. The flats will need some shade on the glass over them, but should be placed well up to the light. These will do better in a greenhouse than a frame and if a temperature of 55 degrees at night can be kept up they will grow well.

Mignonette.

Mignonette being grown in pots will need a few small pieces of brush placed so as to keep the shoots erect. Pinch out the tops of the shoots and grow the plants as cool and airy as possible. They need full sunlight and must be looked over carefully for the green worms which love to eat their foliage. Plants in beds and benches are starting to grow quite fast. Flowers are not needed for some time yet and it is best to pinch back all leading shoots. Supports should be given the plants before they are grown too far. Some use brush stuck in at intervals. We really prefer this to strings. It does not look so artistic, but we think answers well for the grower who has only a bench or two of mignonette. Scratch over the soil frequently and keep all weeds picked out.

Chrysanthemums.

The season of early chrysanthemums is close at hand and for some time mums will call for a good deal of our attention. Tying, disbudding and the removal of weeds and decaying foliage takes up considerable time. Each year many of us aver that we will grow less mums, but each succeeding fall we are found growing the usual quota and trying a few novelties. There is something of a charm in the culture of the queen of autumn, such as we cannot derive from any other plant.

Any plants which have been grown in bush form outdoors or on benches indoors should have been potted before this. If kept well watered and frequently sprayed they will soon fill the pots with roots. We do not consider that such plants will for a moment compare with pot-grown ones, but many still follow this practice and get fairly satisfactory plants. There is a growing tendency towards single flowering varieties in Europe, and this year they promise to be much in evidence at the fall shows. Most of them make splendid pot plants and wide-awake growers would do well to make a note of the better kinds at the exhibitions.

Brief Reminders.

Soft cuttings of perennial phloxes placed in flats of sandy soil in a cold-frame will make nice stock for another season. This will bloom much earlier than spring-rooted cuttings.

Reduce the shading on cattleyas, cœlogyns and dendrobiums. Place any of the latter which have well matured their growths in a cooler and airy house, with plenty of sun.

Stake poinsettias on the benches before they become bent. Grow them cool still. They need heat when the bracts are being developed, but should not be coddled now.

Finish putting in cuttings of any tender plants as soon as possible. Frosts usually arrive in September.

Do not leave Lilium candidum lying around unpotted. Be sure to give them a light, sunny place outdoors until November.

Put in cuttings of Ampelopsis Veitchii, Euonymus radicans and English ivy. All will root freely in an ordinary propagating bench.

Give hydrangeas and rambler roses plenty of sun and a reduced water supply.

Keep genistas well pinched or clipped into shape. Put a batch of cuttings in now in a cool house.

HARDY PERENNIALS.

In the last few years the demand for hardy perennials has increased wonderfully, and this not at all because of a falling off in the demand for the class of plants commonly known as bedding plants, but rather because of a wider and more extended knowledge of the merits of hardy plants for purposes to which the others were not put. In years gone by, herbaceous plants were not given anything like the attention by growers that they are now receiving. Not so long ago it was uncommon to grow these plants in large numbers in pots, but now there are vast numbers so grown and sold every year, in the autumn and spring.

Pot plants of most kinds of perennials are the most satisfactory in various ways; they are easier to ship and they invariably succeed better in the hands of those who are intended ultitablishments, embracing practically every horticultural center except those in England, which country he never visited.

reserve a corner for his favorite, the sweet pea, which he always had the faculty of growing especially well.

In 1890 he leased greenhouses in Grand View, which he conducted for fifteen years. In 1905 he built his present plant at Bound Brook, where he grows chrysanthemums and sweet peas for the New York market. This spring he made a trip to California, his first one to the west, to see his peas growing there and to acquaint himself also with the great seed-growing industry in the Santa Clara valley.

NATIONAL FLOWERS.

The fleur-de-lis is the emblem of France.

The violet is the national flower of Athens.

The sugar maple is the national emblem of Canada.

The shamrock is emblematic of the Emerald Isle.

The linden is the national emblem of Prussia.

England's national flower is the rose.

Italy's emblem is the lily.

Germany's emblem is the cornflower.

The leek is the emblem of Wales; and the thistle of Scotland.

The United States has no national flower.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Show Pelargoniums.

Plants of show pelargoniums which have been on their sides, resting for a few weeks, will now have lost most of their foliage and the wood will be mostly of a brown, nutty color. These should now be pruned back to within two or three eyes of the previous year's growth, turned out of the pots and repotted into smaller receptacles. Shake away all the soil and cut back the long roots. If your plants have been in 6-inch pots they should go into 4-inch. If in 8-inch, they can be squeezed into 5-inch. Use a compost of fibrous loam, well rotted manure and sand. Pot firmly. Give one good watering, then keep on the dry side at the root until the plants start to break. Two or three light sprayings a day will be found helpful. The plants will do well in a coldframe for some weeks yet, and a light shade after repotting for a few days will be beneficial.

Cuttings inserted a few weeks ago ought now to be rooted and potted off. If you omitted putting any in, save the tops of the plants as you prune them. Even quite hard wood devoid of foliage will root, although it takes longer than soft, green wood with leaves. These cuttings can be grown into excellent 6-inch or 8-inch plants by spring and anyone doing a local retail trade can always dispose of a fair number.

Calceolarias.

With cooler nights calceolarias are making better growth. In the hot summer months they seem to make but little headway. Do not allow the plants to become crowded in the flats before potting. Green aphid is partial to both cinerarias and calceolarias and a layer of tobacco stems should be laid in the bottom of the frame. If renewed fortnightly it will keep this pest in check. A light compost of loam, leaf-mold, old rotted manure, with a dash of charcoal well powdered, and sand, makes a suitable compost. Pot the plants moderately loosely in the early stages, but firmer when they go into their flowering pots. Remove sashes to allow night dews to fall on the plants and look out for cabbage-worms, which are fond of the foliage and will quickly destroy the plants if given a free hand.

Cuttings of Calceolaria rugosa may now be put in sand in a cool house or coldframe. Kept well watered, they will be well rooted in about three weeks. There are several colors, but the yellow form, Golden Gem, is the best. Grown along in a cold house and flowered in 6-inch pots, it makes a beautiful decorative plant, being also well adapted for cutting. Plants may be raised from seeds if cuttings are not procurable. Calceolarias need a cold house at all times. Any coddling will quickly ruin them.

Dutch Bulbs.

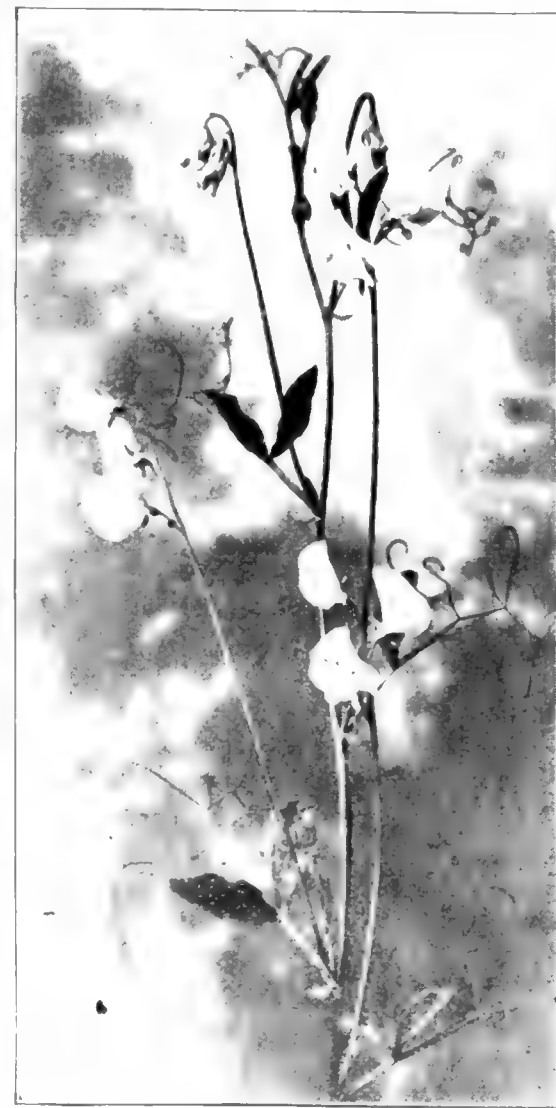

Early consignments of Dutch bulbs are coming to hand and are of extra good quality. A few sorts needed for early forcing should be gotten into flats without delay. La Reine, that most valuable of all forcing tulips, is one; Trumpet Major, or single Von Sion narcissus, is another. While it is possible to get a few of them in for Christmas, by hard forcing, we question if the quality and quantity of flowers obtained make it worth while. The dwarf Due Von Tholl tulip, in several colors, may be had in bloom earlier than any other sort. They have short stems and have never attained any great popularity in America.

Flats containing four inches of soil will answer for any of the bulbs named. A light, moderately rich compost, one containing well pulverized old manure, is ideal, sand being added to give it porosity. For other varieties of Dutch bulbous stock there need be no immediate rush about getting the bulbs in the soil. Unpack the cases, however, and lay the bulbs in flats in a cool room until needed. Do not leave them tied up in the paper bags.

Lorraine Begonias.

Now is the time when the Begonia

Sweet Pea Mrs. Geo. Lewis.

Gloire de Lorraine is commencing to make rapid growth. In the hot summer months the plants appear to make but little headway, but in September they increase in size rapidly. Keep them moderately warm and close and pinch out the tops of the leading shoots to make the plants bushy, also removing all flowers. A light shade only is needed.

Florists' Club of Scranton, Pa., on its Annual Outing at Moosic Lake, August 14.

While Lorraines are best in a cool house when flowering, they do much better in a temperature of 60 degrees at night until the blooming season starts. Place in larger pans before the roots become matted. If plants are small, it is best to use several in a pan. Six-inch pans will grow fine plants of a useful size for retail trade, while 8-inch ones make handsome specimens. Lorraines like a light compost. One containing plenty of good leaf-mold and spent hot-bed manure seems exactly to their liking.

Cyclamens.

Cyclamens, like many other plants, take on additional vigor as the heated summer period wanes. The best place for them yet a while is in coldframes, where they can obtain an abundance of pure air and be shaded from the heat of the noonday sun. Sashes are better left off at night, unless heavy rain threatens. They can also be left off advantageously during the daytime when there is but little sun. Do not place the shadings over the frame too early in the morning and remove them not later than 4 o'clock in the afternoon. A little sun helps cyclamens and many other plants. It warms the pots and promotes root action. Many plants are half ruined by overshading, cyclamens being one of them.

Any plants not yet given their final shift should be attended to at once. From 4-inch they can go into 6-inch and from 5-inch into 7-inch. Some growers flower their stock in as small sizes as 4-inch and 5-inch pots, but such plants cannot hold a candle to the larger ones, no matter how carefully they may be fed.

Seed sown a few weeks ago is germinating nicely and paper covers have been removed. The flats will need some shade on the glass over them, but should be placed well up to the light. These will do better in a greenhouse than a frame and if a temperature of 55 degrees at night can be kept up they will grow well.

Mignonette.

Mignonette being grown in pots will need a few small pieces of brush placed so as to keep the shoots erect. Pinch out the tops of the shoots and grow the plants as cool and airy as possible. They need full sunlight and must be looked over carefully for the green worms which love to eat their foliage. Plants in beds and benches are starting to grow quite fast. Flowers are not needed for some time yet and it is best to pinch back all leading shoots. Supports should be given the plants before they are grown too far. Some use brush stuck in at intervals. We really prefer this to strings. It does not look so artistic, but we think answers well for the grower who has only a bench or two of mignonette. Scratch over the soil frequently and keep all weeds picked out.

Chrysanthemums.

The season of early chrysanthemums is close at hand and for some time mums will call for a good deal of our attention. Tying, disbudding and the removal of weeds and decaying foliage takes up considerable time. Each year many of us aver that we will grow less mums, but each succeeding fall we are found growing the usual quota and trying a few novelties. There is something of a charm in the culture of the queen of autumn, such as we cannot derive from any other plant.

Any plants which have been grown in bush form outdoors or on benches indoors should have been potted before this. If kept well watered and frequently sprayed they will soon fill the pots with roots. We do not consider that such plants will for a moment compare with pot-grown ones, but many still follow this practice and get fairly satisfactory plants. There is a growing tendency towards single flowering varieties in Europe, and this year they promise to be much in evidence at the fall shows. Most of them make splendid pot plants and wide-awake growers would do well to make a note of the better kinds at the exhibitions.

Brief Reminders.

Soft cuttings of perennial phloxes placed in flats of sandy soil in a cold frame will make nice stock for another season. This will bloom much earlier than spring-rooted cuttings.

Reduce the shading on cattleyas, cecylogynes and dendrobiums. Place any of the latter which have well matured their growths in a cooler and airy house, with plenty of sun.

Stake poinsettias on the benches before they become bent. Grow them cool still. They need heat when the bracts are being developed, but should not be coddled now.

Finish putting in cuttings of any tender plants as soon as possible. Frosts usually arrive in September.

Do not leave Lilium candidum lying around unpotted. Be sure to give them a light, sunny place outdoors until November.

Put in cuttings of Ampelopsis Veitchii, Euonymus radicans and English ivy. All will root freely in an ordinary propagating bench.

Give hydrangeas and rambler roses plenty of sun and a reduced water supply.

Keep genistas well pinched or clipped into shape. Put a batch of cuttings in now in a cool house.

HARDY PERENNIALS.

In the last few years the demand for hardy perennials has increased wonderfully, and this not at all because of a falling off in the demand for the class of plants commonly known as bedding plants, but rather because of a wider and more extended knowledge of the merits of hardy plants for purposes to which the others were not put. In years gone by, herbaceous plants were not given anything like the attention by growers that they are now receiving. Not so long ago it was uncommon to grow these plants in large numbers in pots, but now there are vast numbers so grown and sold every year, in the autumn and spring.

Pot plants of most kinds of perennials are the most satisfactory in various ways; they are easier to ship and they invariably succeed better in the hands of those who are intended to mately to grow them than plants lifted out of the open ground.

In planting perennials some consideration should be given to the fact that these plants are to remain where planted for a longer period than bedding plants and consequently more care is necessary in the preparation of the soil for their occupancy.

A good, strong loam above a clay subsoil will be found the most suitable for these plants, generally speaking, but no matter what the nature of the subsoil is, if the loam is shallow, say not more than six inches, it should be filled in so as to make it at least a foot in depth. Before planting, a good dressing of well rotted manure should be given to the soil and this thoroughly dug and incorporated with the soil. Drainage is essential to the proper development of nearly all plants, and herbaceous perennials are no exception to the rule. R. R.

BOSTON.

The Market.

While demand for flowers remains light, better prices are being obtained for such as are arriving. Asters continue to dominate the market. Prices as high as $3 per hundred have been made by first-class stock, and long stems, but ordinary stock has sold much cheaper. With some growers these are a total failure, owing to the prolonged drought. Carnations are few in quantity and are and speciosum, the latter now coming from outdoors. Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora is among the outdoor flowers seen, which just now are not of especially good quality.

Club Field Day.

A heavy shower the night prior to the field day somewhat relieved the drought and clear skies the following day made ideal conditions for the field day August 31, at the Bay State Nurseries, at North Abington. About fifty journeyed on the 12:43 train from Boston. Other arrivals swelled the attendance to seventy-five, including a dozen ladies. The party was met on arrival by W. H. Wyman, the proprietor, and his foreman, Mr. Bennett, and conducted to a restaurant, where an excellent dinner was served. Mr. Wyman, in a few well chosen remarks, welcomed the visitors and hoped they would spend a pleasant afternoon. He was warmly applauded. After cigars had been passed, the party boarded coaches and automobiles and made a tour of the several nurseries, all of which were found in splendid condition. The cleanliness pervading every department was freely commented on, weeds being allowed no foothold. Mr. Wyman's holdings in Abington and vicinity are 350 acres in extent, over 100 acres being in nursery stock; of this, ten acres are devoted to herbaceous perennials.

The blocks of evergreens, maples and other shade trees and deciduous shrubs were all in grand condition. The severe in the woodland near the offices were specially interesting. The plants, in spite of an unfavorable summer, were doing finely. The visitors were photographed before leaving and W. N. Craig in a few remarks proposed a vote of thanks and three cheers for Mr. Wyman, which were given with a will. The return train for Boston was taken at 6:39, after a delightful and instructive day's outing.

Various Notes.

The annual auction sale of stalls at the Boston Coöperative Flower Market, more popularly known as the Music Hall market, was held August 29, with a large attendance of growers. Over 100 stalls were disposed of at an average premium of about $45, the highest being $102.50. Quite a number of new men purchased stalls and the sale was the best yet held.

Everything is in readiness for the auction sale of stalls at Park Street market September 7. An excellent sale is looked for.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Finlayson returned home September 2, after the convention, the Jamestown exposition and other sights were enjoyed, finishing up with a trip up the Hudson river.

The dahlia show at Horticultural hall September 4 and 5 was a big one in spite of the drought. All the big-growers sent exhibits.

Mr. and Mrs. David Lumsden and family are visiting friends in Detroit.

William Sim has had a most successful season with tomatoes. Having practically his entire plant devoted to them, he was enabled to market an enormous quantity at very profitable prices.

H. M. Robinson & Co. are doing a nice summer trade. Hardy ferns are costing them more, but the quality is good just now.

Bulb dealers are busy unpacking large arrivals of Dutch and French bulbs which came to hand last week. The quality seems to be exceptionally good and demand promises to be larger than ever, especially for outdoor planting.

Thomas J. Grey was much benefited by his recent European trip and his stock of humorous stories has been materially augmented.

W. W. Rawson & Co. will provide special cars to Marblehead September 21, for the club field day to their dahlia grounds.

Mrs. E. M. Gill, of Medford, was one of the ladies present at the last club field day and seemed thoroughly to enjoy it. For a lady of 78 years she is remarkably active. There have been few meetings of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society in a long term of years which she has not attended and she invariably has some exhibit at the various shows.

The New England Dahlia Society held its annual meeting at Horticultural hall, September 4, at 2 p. m. The membership continues to grow apace.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Anomatheca Cruenta.

I have read with interest in the REVIEW of August 22 E. V. Hallock's paper on "Hardy Bulbs and Roots," and note he utterly condemns Anomatheca cruenta, from which I assumed that garden culture was referred to. so-called red freesia, I can say that it is as easy to grow as the freesia and as positive to flower, and free, while the bloom is brilliant and durable. Seed is freely produced and self-sown seeds under favorable conditions will, I believe, flower the following season. In later stages of growth the anomatheca will enjoy even more copious watering than the freesia. The flowering season is from April to June, but it may be had earlier. I can recommend it as a gem for the amateur. THEO F. BECKERT.

CONVENTION VIEWS.

The accompanying illustrations are from photographs taken during the S. A. F. convention in Philadelphia. The first view shows the grotto of M. Rice & Co. This grotto was an artistic triumph, every trace of the warehouse being removed or hidden from the basement by the really beautiful decorations of beech and birch foliage over draperies, with sweet scented pine, and flowers on the tables. The second view shows the store as you entered the office on the right, the showcases and walls in gala attire.

In describing the grotto, Rice & Co. say: "It was about eighty feet long, the sides and walls being covered with red rep cloth, covered with birch and beech sprays, and pine branches. Each side of the grotto was divided by wicker decorating screens into six booths, the screens being decorated with birch and beech sprays and natural flowers. The center of the grotto was arched from booth to booth. The whole effect was certainly very fine, and was favorably commented on by some of the best decorators who visited Philadelphia. Each booth contained a table at which four or five persons could be comfortably seated, and was decorated with a vase of fresh flowers, which were changed daily. The grotto was opened every day from Tuesday until Friday, from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m., and refreshments were served to over 600 people.

ASPARAGUS SPRENGERI.

Will Asparagus Sprengeri grow successfully planted in a solid bed between rows of sweet peas? How can I grow it best, in benches or solid beds? R. S. B.

Asparagus Sprengeri will grow well either in solid beds or in benches. The latter give more sprays during the winter and are, therefore, to be preferred. We have never seen Sprengeri grown between sweet peas. The temperature would be a little low. Sweet peas prefer 45 degrees to 48 degrees at night in winter, while the Sprengeri will do much better if kept 5 degrees to 10 degrees warmer. If you care to try the experiment, however, we think you will have fair success until the sweet peas grow tall enough to shut out the light too much. We are afraid many of the sprays would be trampled upon in giving the sweet peas the necessary attention.

Why not try double or single violets between the sweet peas? These could be pulled out in early spring. They would give you a nice lot of flowers all winter. It will be more satisfactory to grow the asparagus in benches by itself. C. W.

THE salesmen for florists' supplies now carry large lines of samples on the road.

WORD comes from Belgium that the azaleas are in fine shape, as the result of a good growing season.

WHEAT is up in price about 2 cents a pound and reported scarce because of an unfavorable season in Italy.

THE Newport Horticultural Society has issued an attractive premium list for the exhibition to be given at Masonic hall, Newport, R. I., September 17 to 19.

NOT only the S. A. F., but the Canadian Horticultural Association, which is the florists' organization in the Dominion, will meet at Niagara Falls next August.

THE flower show at Denison, Tex., is each year gaining in scope and importance. The premium list for the 1907 exhibition, to be held November 6 to 8, is the most comprehensive yet issued. Copies may be had by addressing T. W. Larkin, secretary of the Denison Civic Improvement League.

AT the establishment of the Poehlmann Bros. Co., Chicago, there is a division of responsibility at night. The firemen are charged only with maintaining steam pressure, while conditions in the greenhouses are in the care of good growers, known as temperature men from the fact that their principal function is to regulate temperature by means of the ventilators. "All the air that is safe" is their rule.

DEUTSCHE CYCAS GESELLSCHAFT.

A firm has been established in Berlin under this title. The objects of the undertaking consist in furthering the interests of manufacturers of prepared cycas leaves in particular, in introducing and carrying out arrangements having for their purpose the joint sale of these goods, so as to prevent unhealthy competition, and the obtaining of suitable prices and payment. The capital amounts to 25,500 mk., and the secretary is Dr. Phil. Fritz Schulte, in Berlin.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

EXPRESS RATES REDUCED.

I beg to report that August 27 the express rates of the United States Express Co. from Madison, N. J., and other points were reduced from $1 to 60 cents.

This result of the appeal of the S. A. F. to the Interstate Commerce Commission is a handsome illustration of the usefulness of the society to the florists' trade. It is one of many arguments for a larger membership and for a consequent larger purse, which would effectively equip it for more such work.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Thomas Gunn.

Thomas Gunn died August 22, at his home, 1441 South Salina street, Syracuse, N. Y., where he had lived with his sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Pycroft. He was 72 years old, had been a resident of that part of the city for nearly thirty years and had been engaged for many years in the florists' trade.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

["Daffodils—Narcissus and How to Grow Them," by A. M. Kirby, 235 pages, profusely illustrated. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York, publishers; price $1.10 net.]

This volume is uniform with its predecessors in the Garden Library series of Doubleday, Page & Co. The author, A. M. Kirby, is favorably known to many in the trade as the head of the bulb and flower seed department of the seed house of Peter Henderson & Co. This book is specially valuable because the ratings given to each variety show what they are capable of under American conditions. The garden value of the variety has been kept prominently in mind, even in the classification, leading, for example, to the group of the "lesser trumpets."

The text naturally divides into two parts: (1) Cultural, including commercial production of cut flowers in the field and under glass; (2) A critical appraisal of all the varieties commonly in the trade (about 500) costing $5 a bulb and less. The illustrations are designed to show the character of the leading sections and follow in natural sequence; and the key will help anyone to properly place any flower.

The price of the book is $1.10 net, or $1.21 postpaid, at which the REVIEW will supply any of the volumes of the Garden Library series, as follows: "Roses and How to Grow Them," by many experts; "Ferns and How to Grow Them," by G. A. Woolson; "Lawns and How to Make Them," by Leonard Barron; "Daffodils—Narcissus and How to Grow Them," by A. M. Kirby.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The demand shows some improvement, and the sentiment in the market is that September will be a good month. The out-of-town buyers are being heard from regularly, with a promise of an early active demand, especially if the month is a cool one. City business is not yet large.

The supply of roses is above the normal at this season. Indeed, the first of the week saw an unwieldy supply of all varieties of roses except Beauty, following one or two abnormally warm days. Monday night saw the market with a considerable proportion of the day's rose receipts still in wholesalers' ice-boxes, and Tuesday did not suffice to clear them out. The quality of roses generally is excellent. Beauties are not enough for the demand, but Richmond is in especially large supply.

There are no considerable receipts of carnations, but the market is easing a little in this department. Asters have been in the heaviest supply of the season for the last week, and even the best stock has been going to waste. One wholesaler avers that the waste of asters in the last week of August was greater than the waste during the glut of the early varieties. Some splendid stock is seen.

There are enormous receipts of gladoli, and it is impossible to clear them all out at anything like fair prices, for the quality is poor. Hydrangeas and other outdoor flowers also are abundant and slow sale. There was a flurry in lilies the first of this week. It seems that practically all the houses which have been making a specialty of summer lilies are out of stock at the same time and a small demand serves to make everyone hustle to find the necessary stock. Valley is selling well. A few auratums still are seen.

All sorts of green goods are equal to requirements.

Most of the houses closed shortly after noon on Labor day, but others found it would take them all the afternoon to get their orders out. In future it is doubtful if any of the houses close on Labor day. The day was not at all generally observed in Chicago this year.

Hereafter the wholesale houses will be open until 6 p. m. daily, except Sunday.

The August Business.

It is the usual report that the August business was ahead of last year. This market each summer makes increased effort to provide for the hot weather demand for flowers. Practically every house was better equipped this summer than last, and the result has been an increase in sales. There always is more or less call for good stock in the summer, especially for well-grown roses. A few houses report a decrease in the summer business, but these are the ones which failed to make any special effort to provide stock for it.

Weather in August.

Weather conditions in Chicago made a fair showing for August, the temperature averaging normal for the month of August for the last thirty-six years in which the government weather station has existed here. The mean temperature was 71 degrees. The highest was 92, August 11, and the lowest 52, August 22 and 25. The sun shone 278 out of a possible 415 hours. The total rainfall was 4.22 inches, or 1.43 inches above normal.

Various Notes.

C. L. Washburn returned Saturday from a fortnight's fishing near Athelstane, Wis. He found Bassett & Washburn cutting the largest summer rose crop of their history.

Fred H. Lemon, Richmond, Ind., president of the American Carnation Society, was a visitor this week.

C. M. Dickinson, of E. H. Hunt's, says that the largest order of supplies which ever went out of this market was that shipped to Charles Hammer, who is starting in business at Memphis as the East End Floral Co. The first shipment made two large wagon-loads. Mr. Dickinson says they are receiving many compliments on their new catalogue.

One of the week's visitors was Dan MacRorie, representing W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J.

J. B. Deamud is visiting his father at Cairo, Mich. Will Kyle says they have every reason to be pleased with the way business has held up through the summer.

Frank Johnson, of the A. L. Randall Co., has returned from a fortnight's trip as far west as Ogden and Salt Lake.

Weiland & Risch are cutting 1,800 to 2,000 carnations a day from the early planted stock, and say the demand is so good they can not often accommodate those who do not place orders in advance.

The first meeting of the season of the Chicago Florists' Club will be held in Handel hall at 8 p. m. on the evening of September 12.

FRITZ BAHR, Proprietor.

HIGHLAND PARK, Illinois, Aug. 25th, 1907.

E. H. HUNT, 78 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen: I am in receipt of your Catalogue of Florists' and Greenhouse Supplies for season 1907-08, and wish to congratulate you on your success in your efforts to give to the trade not only a most complete catalogue, but what I would term seventy-six pages full of suggestions and a list of necessities for modern Florists' establishments. No catalogue of any other house can be compared with it in regard to originality, neatness, excellent half-tone illustrations and the valuable information it contains which is, of so much help, especially to the progressive out-of-town Florist who desires to employ up-to-date methods in his business, which means success. With my best wishes, I am week with A. L. Randall at his farm in Michigan. Mr. Goerisch reports that Mr. Randall has the best crop of peaches in his section.

Philip Schupp says that the house of J. A. Budlong has every reason to be pleased with the summer business. He says their far southern buyers have left their standing orders on the books right through the summer, a circumstance heretofore without precedent. They are cutting some fine Brides and Maids from carried-over stock.

August Poehlmann sent word home from Philadelphia that he had lost his pocketbook, with his money, railroad tickets and blank checks.

The edelweiss at Lincoln park is attracting much attention from the daily papers.

E. E. Pieser says that for the first time in history August was a better month than July for the Kennicott Bros. Co. Incidentally it is worth mentioning that it is the first time in many years that Mr. Pieser has spent the entire month of August in the store.

John Muno has practically gone out of cut flower growing, after having devoted nearly twenty years to it. His establishment now is nearly all devoted to an autumn crop of cucumbers, which will be followed by lettuce. He has retained a few carnations.

P. L. McKee, of the J. C. Moninger Co., and Mrs. McKee leave September 19 for a trip through the east, including a visit to relatives in North Carolina and Tennessee.

Mike Stauch is in town this week, looking for a greenhouse establishment that can be bought on favorable terms. He wants to grow cut flowers for the wholesale market.

E. C. Amling is receiving some fine Monrovia chrysanthemums, and, as usual with the first of the season, they are bringing $4 per dozen.

Zech & Mann think the roses are farther advanced than usual at this date. They are cutting Brides of good October quality.

Wietor Bros. are cutting some Kate Moulton roses that find prompt sale. They have good stems and the necks are strong enough to hold up the buds.

Word has come from Evergreen, Colo., where Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sperry are sojourning, that Mr. Sperry was injured in an accident while horseback riding the other day. His horse fell and rolled upon him, the pommel of the saddle inflicting a bad injury, and when the horse got upon his feet he stepped on one of Mr. Sperry's hands, cutting it badly. The physician says Mr. Sperry will not be able to be about for three or four weeks.

W. A. Arnold, foreman for George Reinberg, while at the convention at Philadelphia, made a trip to Rutherford and bought another carload of orchid plants.

Vaughan & Sperry still have peonies, red and white. They have kept excellently. This is a later date than peonies ever before were seen in this market.

O. P. Bassett is suffering with hay fever.

C. W. McKellar and the champion lady bowler have just returned from the convention. They visited New York, Washington and other points last week.

The E. F. Winterson Co. reports a satisfactory business, with French bulbs and Boston ferns as the principal items on the street floor.

Peter Reinberg had contemplated sending out the Marshall Field rose next spring, but Leonard Kill states that he has about concluded to hold it for another year. The way it is blooming pleases them immensely.

The Poehlmann Bros. Co. say they have not had a dull day all summer and that shipping trade has been by far the best part of the business. They are already cutting some splendid roses and look forward to an exceedingly large fall business.

The telegraph strike is slowly wearing itself out. The service is now quite fair.

Peter Reinberg has now equipped twenty-three of his boilers with the Martin rocking grate.

O. J. Friedman had the family order for the Nelson Morris funeral. The principal piece was a casket cover of valley. This funeral brought out one of the largest floral displays seen in this city in many months and nearly all the leading retailers had their share.

W. L. Palinsky has recovered from the illness that prevented his attending the convention.

John Bratt, at Glen Ellyn, has sold his greenhouses for removal from the property and is contemplating a trip west with a view to locating there.

The George Wittbold Co. has installed an electric pump at its Buckingham place establishment. When the city water pressure runs down the electric pump is automatically started, forcing water from a well on the place and maintaining a steady pressure.

BUYERS

AT THIS, the opening of the new season, we want to emphasize the fact that you need look no farther for a reliable, dependable source of supply for all cut flowers. We handle great quantities of stock—everything in season—and can supply all grades. If there is any item on which we are sold out at time of receipt of your order, we shall not fail to visit every house in this market in the effort to get it for you. We are here to see that you get what you want.

GROWERS

OUR OUTLET for good stock is increasing at a very rapid rate, and we have the facilities for handling to good advantage the output of a number of additional growers whose stock is of shipping grade. Growers of Roses, Carnations, Mums, Violets or any other good stock, if not satisfied with their present market, will do well to correspond with us. We have both the shipping and local demand and facilities for taking the best of care of stock, and can offer it in the most attractive shape. Write today.

We are in a position to supply GUARANTEED FERTILIZERS at prices that cannot be beaten by any house that sells pure goods. See page 89, Review of August 22, or write.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business seems to have picked up some since last report. Besides more in the line of funeral work, there has been quite a demand for wedding flowers during the last week. Stock remains about the same as last reported. Kaiserin, La Detroit and Meteor are about the only good roses available, with La Detroit in the lead. Some very fine asters are coming in daily; the price averages about one cent, the best ones bringing two cents. Gladioli, sweet peas and a variety of other stock are helping out. Green stock is quite plentiful.

Michigan State Fair.

When this report reaches our readers the fifty-eighth annual fair held by the Michigan State Agricultural Society, at Detroit, will be about over.

The grounds are, of course, looking better every year, as the shrubbery gets more developed. Most of the shrubbery about the main entrance has been donated by some of Michigan's largest nurseries. J. C. Vaughan, of Chicago, was given honorable mention for a bed of seedling petunias, a bed of King Humbert cannas and a bed of Superb roses. Nathan Smith & Son, of Adrian, were also given honorable mention for a bed of Express cannas.

The following firms are on the grounds with exhibits of nursery stock: W. W. Essig, Pontiac, Mich.; R. J. Coryell, Birmingham, Mich.; E. Ferrand & Son, Detroit, Mich.; I. E. Ilgenfritz, Monroe, Mich.; the Greening Nursery, Monroe, Mich.

The exhibits by professional florists were as follows: Best floral design, Mrs.

Gowanlock first, J. C. Bogula second. The entries for dahlias were all made by W. F. Bola, of Ada, Mich. There were five entries, and, of course, Mr. Bola received five firsts. His exhibit was a very commendable one. S. Taplin entered in the classes for palms, and also flower bedding, but had no competitor. Collection of ferns, S. Taplin, first; J. C. Bogula, second. Specimen fern, T. Gowanlock, first; S. Taplin, second. Geraniums, T. Gowanlock, first and second; J. C. Bogula, third. Collection of coleus, Gowanlock, first. Boxes for porches and windows, Gowanlock, first; Taplin, second; Bogula, third. This just about covered all the exhibits; that is, in the professional class.

As will be seen, there was really no competition worth speaking about in any of the entries. Much of the stock entered was hardly worthy of any prize. Some years ago nearly all of the larger Detroit florists took some interest in the fair, but this seems to be dropping off from year to year, this year there being none of the large florists on the grounds.

Frank Holznagle and Robert Unger acted as judges of the flower and plant exhibits, respectively. They did their duty well and the selection of such men as judges may tend to increase the interest in the fair for another year.

The only really attractive collection of plants was that shown by the park board. This comprised a collection of palms, ferns, etc.

Various Notes.

Theodore Damerow is cutting some exceptionally fine asters. The stems are long and stiff and the flowers of a fine, clear color.

The Breitmeyers also are cutting some very fine asters at Mt. Clemens.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Labor day opened the fall season with a big rain storm, making wholesale flowerdom funereal, spoiling the parade of the 50,000 and the restful outings of the 5,000,000 New Yorkers. August was the most delightful month florists have ever experienced in cool, sunny weather, and gave opportunity to make ready for the great season of prosperity just at hand. There is not a cloud in the floricultural commercial sky.

Little first-class stock is yet reaching the New York market. When it does, whether orchids, roses or carnations, the demand absorbs it quickly. There is a big call from the society centers, especially from Newport, and mostly for orchids and Beauties. Prices for these are rising, and for good Brides and Maids, yet few and far between, better figures than average quotations are easily obtainable.

The quality of valley is excellent, and carnations are lengthening their stems and beginning to look natural again. The river of asters and gladioli is as wide and deep as ever. Market gardeners are growing asters all around us. This accounts for part of the flood, and the same may be said of the gladioli. Childs and Cowee send enough daily to New York to beautify every country store in the Union. Selected stock commands $1 a hundred, America steps a notch higher, but the great, common, everyday lower class of the procession is well sold at 50 cents a hundred. The same applies to asters.

Next will come the dahlias and, within speaking distance, the army of chrysanthemums is on the way. Plenty of lilies are coming in, and hydrangeas, any number, for there is not a suburban home without a yard of them. They are as popular and universally in evidence in the fall as is the Crimson Rambler in the spring.

Various Notes.

Do not forget the club meeting next Monday evening, September 9, at the new rooms in the Murray Lyceum, Thirty-fourth street and Third avenue; wonderfully handy, for Long Islanders and an excellent location for all. John B. Nugent has something special in the commissary department and the occasion will be made one of jollity and importance to the club's future prosperity.

The new president of the S. A. F. bears his honors and congratulations with becoming modesty. The position is all the more gratifying because it was unsought and unexpected.

These are the days of fairs, though they are often on anything but a fair day, for at noon on Monday the heavens were still open and the rain descending. Over on Staten Island the Richmond County Agricultural Society begins a six-day session, which it calls New York City's Great Interborough Fair. They announce exhibits from Bobbink & Atkins, Stumpp & Walter Co. and growers from Sparkill, Nyack, Glens Falls and other outside sections. The fair grounds are near a popular summer resort, Midland Beach. Great crowds are expected.

Saturday, August 31, an agricultural and horticultural exhibition began at Schuetzen park, Glendale, L. I., under the auspices of the Schwaebischer Saengerbund. This is the thirty-first annual exhibition of the society. The Long Island florists were much in evidence.

September 4 the annual exhibition of the Southampton Horticultural Society began at Agawan hall, Southampton, Long Island.

The seedsmen's windows these days appeal to the vegetarian's heart and make him glad such tomatoes as Thorburn's windows display, from currant size to Ponderosa, solve the food problem. To specify all the other exhibits in these windows would need a catalogue. Stumpp & Walter's new windows seem built to last and are tastefully filled with the products of their seeds. Henderson's have almost everything in fruit and flower.

veteran spieler has a strenuous season ahead of him.

Out-of-town visitors at A. T. Boddington's last week were: A. Ferguson, of Dupuy & Ferguson, Montreal; William Williams and Robert Borroughs, of St. Anne de Bellevue, Quebec; Mr. Corley, secretary of the Green Floral Co., of Dallas, Texas; E. W. Clark, of New London, Conn.; Harry Papworth, of New Orleans; Otto Wittbold and wife, of Chicago; W. O. Roy, superintendent Mt. Royal Cemetery, Montreal; William Diller and wife, of Detroit.

F. O. Pierce & Co. have their new offices now on the fifth floor of the Mail and Express building, corner of Broadway and Fulton streets, next door to their old quarters, lately destroyed by fire.

The Dutch bulbs are arriving in large quantities and crowding the French bulbs out. All are in prime condition. The French goods are hardly up to the standard of previous years and are scarce, owing to prolonged dry weather on the continent.

Mr. Loechner, of the Yokohama Nursery Co., is back at his desk after a severe hospital experience. Miss Mills, of the same company, is enjoying her vacation in Canada. Arnold Ringier, of Chicago, and J. R. Jock and V. Matraia, of California, were guests of Mr. Loechner August 31.

Rickards Bros. are now receiving their bulb importations; 150 cases of French and Dutch bulbs arrived August 31, the day they celebrated their first anniversary as proprietors of the Bridgman business. They have made a fine start. A. J. Rickards has just completed his New England trip.

We are all glad to welcome W. H. Taplin as a resident of New York.

O. V. Zangen, of Hoboken, will open a wholesale cut flower store early this month in the Coogan building, on the fifth floor, with C. Schaefer, his traveling salesman, formerly with Stumpp, as manager. Mr. Zangen will devote his personal attention to his rapidly growing seed business, as usual.

Perkins & Nelson have a fine new delivery wagon, and Mr. Perkins makes daily journeys to his Brooklyn clientele.

Victor Bergman, of Ernst Wienhoeber's force in Chicago, is spending his vacation with friends in New York city.

George Baker, with Ford Bros., is holidaying in the Catskills.

F. Hicks & Co. already find themselves cramped for room to handle their growing trade.

The Broadway retailers are busy with improvements in their handsome stores. Bowe has made many changes for the better. Van Praag also has enlarged his facilities.

Fred Leutz, of David Clarke's Sons, with his family, is back from a holiday in Michigan and Chicago.

E. C. Horan has been recuperating for two weeks at Lake George.

L. W. Wheeler and wife leave this week for their new home in California. For the last seven years Mr. Wheeler has been manager of Vaughan's Seed Store and he has long been an active member of the New York Florists' Club; was elected treasurer at the last election and was a most willing and persistent worker in its behalf.

John Nash and wife have returned from a three weeks' rest at Lake Mahopac, N. Y., an ideal spot for honeymoons and their anniversaries. F. W. Nash, his brother, of Allentown, Pa., called August 31, on his way to their old home in England.

John Seligman and Joseph Levy are back from their vacations, with their families, in the mountains, and ready for a big winter. September 9 Mr. and Mrs. Levy celebrate their wedding anniversary.

H. Frank Darrow, the bulb importer, came back last week from Europe after a successful trip.

The Yokohama Nursery Co. reports the arrival of the first shipment of formosum lilies in superb condition.

William Her has returned from a two weeks' rest in the Catskills. Charles Matthews has been at Delaware Water Gap. Both are with E. C. Horan.

John Thielman and son Fred, Alexander Donaldson and John Egenbrod have been sea fishing in Mr. Thielman's naphtha launch, with a record of 150 sea bass in a day.

Mrs. Fury, of Brooklyn, daughter of the late James Mallon and sister of John and Joseph Mallon, died last week and was buried Thursday. Many beautiful floral offerings attested the sympathy of the trade for the brothers.

John Hardman, formerly with Charles Habermann, will open a retail store this month at One Hundredth street and Broadway, a splendid section of the city and growing more remunerative every day.

Marshall Clarke, of David Clarke's Sons, and family, have returned from their summer celebration in Canada and the Thousand Islands. Gilmore Clarke and family are enjoying the ozone of the Catskills.

William Ford, of Ford Bros., has had three weeks of fun, frolic and forgetfulness in the Shawangunk Hills, Pennsylvania.

Thomas Martin, Traendly & Schenck's lieutenant, spent his two weeks' relief at Spring Valley, in Dutchess county, where health abounds and violets perfume the air.

Charles Conlin, of Thorley's, has returned from the mountains as young as when he began buying flowers for the 400, 'steen years ago.

Thomas Young's two 500-foot houses at Boundbrook, N. J., are nearly completed. Only gardenias, it is said, will here make their home. Here is faith in society or in ability to make and keep popular a flower without which one is not in the fashion.

John B. Nugent sent out, September 2, a dozen handsome funeral designs for the funeral of a prominent actress. A standing wreath of valley and orchids was especially beautiful.

Fred Smythe returned from Canton, O., August 30. Few realize the size of the contract he has assumed in the decoration of the grounds around the McKinley memorial, the hundreds of men engaged and the great trees planted.

A. T. Hartnupp, who has had charge of Wadley & Smythe's landscape work for some time, has accepted a position as gardener and superintendent at Long Branch, N. J., with Murray Guggenheim.

Another landscape gardener will soon hang out his shingle. Adolph Jaenicke, of Floral Park, long in the service of John Lewis Childs, as propagator and greenhouse superintendent, will branch out on his own account. He is a member of the New York Florists' Club and a

The Market.

After being away from home nearly two weeks, we found the market about the same as when we left it and business among the different retailers as usual during the month of August. About the only demand is for white flowers for funeral work, which is the only kind of work that is being made up just now. The opening of the schools this week should help, as well as the opening of all the downtown theaters. Stock at the four wholesale houses runs about the same. In looking it over Monday morning, September 2, we found plenty of asters in all colors and, as that was Labor day, the demand was quite good for this stock. The late comers found the best stock of it pretty well sold out. There are plenty of roses in the market, but not of the best grades. Thousands of short-stemmed stock are being dumped. There are too many gladioli in the market, also tuberose stalks. Carnations are very poor. Here and there a bunch or two of good ones come in, but very few. Quite a lot of short and medium Beauties are coming in, which sell well. In greens everything is in plenty.

Various Notes.

Miss Newman and Miss Armstrong are spending their vacations at the Dells, in Wisconsin.

W. C. Smith, John Burke and George Angermueller returned home after a ten days' fishing trip. They report a great time, one that was much enjoyed by the whole party.

Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Weber, Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Miller and Mr. and Mrs. Meinhardt spent last week at French Lick Springs.

C. A. Kuehn arrived home from Detroit, Mich., where he went from the convention to visit the old folks, whom he found enjoying the best of health.

President-elect W. C. Young, of the St. Louis Florists' Club, is still enjoying the sea bathing at Atlantic City. He will return in time to preside at the club meeting next Thursday afternoon.

President H. C. Irish, of the Florists' Club, will visit the Jamestown Exposition this month, in the interest of the Horticultural Congress, of which he is secretary.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Berning have returned from their eastern trip, including the convention. The trip greatly benefited Mrs. Berning's health.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Weber and their sister are enjoying themselves at Niagara Falls this week.

Miss Theresa Badaracco will take a ten days' vacation next week, spending most of her time at French Lick Springs and returning by way of Chicago.

Commencing with this week, the wholesale houses will again keep open after 5 p. m. and all day Saturday, as the early closing was only for the months of July and August.

Most of the S. A. F. excursionists have returned. They have much praise for the Philadelphia boys, as to the way they were entertained, and are with me in saying that it was one of the best conventions they ever attended. They are also much pleased with the selection of Frank Traendly for president, and with all the other officers.

Henry Ostertag, of the firm of Oster-tag Bros., personally superintended the big decoration for the opening of the new Marquette hotel, at Eighteenth street and Washington avenue. In every room were flowers and plants and the office was very tastefully decorated. He was assisted by his friend, John Burke. This was one of the largest decorations of the year.

R. J. Windler, C. Bergsterman and the Eggeling Floral Co., on South Grand avenue, report a very good summer trade and expect great things this fall.

The second Sunday opening of Shaw's Garden this year took place last Sunday, September 1, and over 10,000 visitors took advantage of the beautiful day to see the sights of this famous garden. Superintendent H. C. Irish and twenty-five guides were kept busy showing the visitors over the grounds and answering questions. The next Sunday opening will take place the first Sunday in June, 1908.

Adolph Brix, the St. Louis avenue florist, reports that his help advertisement in the REVIEW brought him over fifty replies the first week, from all parts of the United States.

The St. Louis Florists' Club will hold its regular monthly meeting on Thursday afternoon, September 12, at 2 o'clock, in the Burlington building. President Irish and President-elect Young expect to have the largest attendance of the year. The

The Rising Eastern Market.

There are ripples of business here and there on the quiet summer sea of business, indicating that fall has come, forerunner of increased activity. There are good days and poor ones, with just enough of the former to keep the latter from becoming unduly depressing. As-ters rule the market, with sales at the highest listed quotations by no means infrequent. Purple is at present entirely too numerous to keep pace in price with white, pale pink and lavender, diplomacy being needed to move the finest flowers of this color. The bulk of the asters are still of the poorer grades and less easily sold than the better flowers. More gladioli have been sent in than the market could absorb.

Beauties are too plentiful in the lower grades. Good blooms, with stems from thirty inches upwards, are in demand at good figures. Easter lilies are becoming more plentiful. They are the only large lilies in the market today.

Carnations are scarce. Nice flowers, though small and borne on short stems, are bringing extremely good money. Kaiserin sells better than any other rose, possibly excepting good Beauties. Short-stemmed blooms of Richmond are entirely too plentiful. Other roses are not so much overdone.

Asparagus plumosus has been poor stock, but the other members of the green section received better support. Valley is abundant. Just a few cattleyas are obtainable.

Fall Prospects.

The prospects for the coming season are as bright, yes, brighter, than ever before. The supply houses, whose business is the pulse of the florists' body, have more and heavier advance orders than any previous September 4. While it is too early to go into detail, yet there is confidence in the air. The depression in securities is merely a light malady. General business is prosperous; crops, though late, are abundant. An active season may be fairly anticipated. The outlook for the greenhouse crops is generally excellent. Most growers say their houses never looked better. A good deal depends on getting the crops when they are wanted. To this end special effort should be directed.

Compton.

Compton, the country seat of John T. Morris, president of the Chestnut Hill Horticultural Society, is one of the most interesting of our suburban places. Compton, lying to the north of Chestnut Hill, commands a fine view over the valley of the Wissahickon, on the south, and to the northward over picturesque hills and valleys to White Marsh. Compton is a triumph of nature, aided by art to no small extent. The situation of Compton is ideal. The soil is not. To make it so hundreds of tons of street dirt have been added, Mr. Morris and his gardener, Frank Gould, believing this fertilizer better for their purpose than any other. The condition of the lawns and shrubbery confirms them in this belief. It would be hard to find their superior anywhere.

Possibly at some future time I can give you a detailed description of Compton. Today I want to call attention broadly to its most interesting features. The general plan in the planting at Compton is the development of the individual to the highest degree of perfection and the comparison of different varieties of the same species. Flowering shrubs are a feature of this place. All the best varieties of each species of blooming shrub are planted singly, with plenty of room to develop to perfection, yet near enough to the others for the family group to be seen at a glance. For purposes of comparison this arrangement is excellent. It is so carried out that the general effect is heightened, there being no stiffness anywhere; undulating ground, curved lines and grassy walks, with a stream and a summer house in rustic style, a place to study and to love nature.

Compton is famous for its fine grotto. The house is unique in construction, a dome shaped with architectural aspirations that make its lines beautiful, the stone smoke-stack and air-flue rising on each side of the doorway like sentinels guarding the portcullis of an ancient castle. Inside, the impression is of a light cave filled with a great number of varieties of ferns. There are steps of rock leading about the cave, up and down, a dark hollow in one corner where water plashes steadily over certain filmy ferns most rare.

There are woods and nurseries and glass houses, but I have described enough to give you some idea of Compton. If you are a true plant lover both Mr. Morris and Mr. Gould will welcome you to this earthly paradise.

Various Notes.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have received many callers during the last week. Business with them is four or five times ahead of last season.

John Tull, nephew of Herbert G. Tull, is manager for William B. Reed, Chambersburg, Pa. Mr. Tull has had exceptional educational advantages in all branches of horticulture and is doing his best to build up a good mailing plant business, to which his firm has catered for many years.

Edward N. Cavanaugh, gardener for the Laurel Hill Cemetery Co., is adding a new greenhouse 20x100 feet, with show house in front, of Lord & Burnham material.

Charles McNamee has succeeded John Hobson in charge of the William Graham Co. plant at Olney.

Antoine Wintzer, of the Conard & Jones Co., has a new white canna, fourth generation from Mont Blanc, that shows marked improvement over the parent, the flowers being of enormous size, pure white in color.

John Westcott entertained a party of choice spirits at Waretown last week.

The Florex Gardens have two of their three marine boilers and sixty-foot stacks in position and expect to be able to put on heat in a few days, should that be necessary.

Alburger & Cascaden have dissolved partnership. Edward Alburger will continue the business.

Carl Cortis, representing the Joseph Heacock Co., made his reappearance in town September 2 with the first roses.

William Stevens, Samuel Lilley and Edgar Upton are still rustivating.

Charles E. Meehan read an able paper before the Florists' Club Tuesday evening, September 3, which appears elsewhere in this issue.

The Philadelphia Cut Flower Co. opened for business in its commodious new building at 1517 Sansom street September 2. They have nearly 1,200 square feet of floor space on the first floor, with more than that in the basement, which extends under the pavement. Both R. C. Hayden and William J. Muth were on hand early, busy as bees, yet not forgetting to give a hearty greeting to all callers.

Charles Henry Fox, on September 3, reopened his downtown shop, "The Sign of the Rose," for business.

Robert A. Stewart, who has been closed during August, reopened his store on Thirteenth street, below Walnut, this week.

William P. Craig and Mrs. Craig have returned from a few days spent in the mountains near Easton, Pa.

Edgar Bayley, formerly with Myers & Samtman, is doing well as manager of the greenhouses of Charles H. Buenning, of Easton, Pa. The stock grown is sold in Mr. Buenning's store. PHIL.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

We have had a long, severe drought. G. Bright says that such shrubs as the althæas and white oleanders have been the greatest help in keeping up a supply of flowers after the annuals were all burned up. Clematis paniculata is doing finely and, with tuberose and white hyacinth beans, we defy the great heat and the hot, drying winds. Of course we get some carnation flowers and roses, but the supply is quite limited and the roses just now only good when in bud.

PEKIN, ILL.—George A. Kuhl and wife will be home this week from an eastern trip of five weeks' duration.

GROTON, MASS.—S. H. Shattuck says that everything in this vicinity is suffering from the extremely dry weather.

Notice, An Impostor

A person, as yet unknown, has been calling upon florists in different parts of the country representing himself as J. H. Myers, of Altoona and Eldorado, Pa., soliciting loans in cash, also cut flowers, etc., directing bills to be sent to me. In some cases he has succeeded. A notice similar to this was placed in the columns of two florists' journals some months ago. His latest attempts, and with some success, were made in Philadelphia latter part of August.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Almost everyone is glad that August is past and the time approaching when business should revive. Vacations are all right, and a few dull days are not so bad, but by September 1 everyone is ready to get down to hustling.

Good white asters have been very scarce the last week and there were not enough lilies to go around, but there were plenty of roses and good gladioli to take care of all the trade there was, and some to spare, so that, except among the few who must have a special flower, there was no hardship felt.

Various Notes.

There is still some convention talk, and, to be fair to Philadelphia, the talk is all in its favor, as some of the oldest attendants say it was the best convention they ever attended.

The growers are very busy just now getting carnations planted, and, as a rule, the plants look fine. There has not been much complaint so far about diseases in the field, except among some few of the new sorts. However, the complaint will probably come later. As labor is high and good help is scarce, most of the growers will be so short-handed that stock will not get all the attention it needs after it is housed, on account of the great amount of fall work, and when the plants commence going back the excuse will come.

The Pittsburg exposition has arranged a floral hall this season, the first for some years. The contract was let to John R. Elliott, a son of Capt. John Elliott, who had charge of that work for the old exposition for many years, when the floral hall was the principal exhibit at the exposition.

What was originally the Scotch Hill market lot was in 1869 made into the first public park planted with flowers. This was done by Captain Elliott. Three fountains were put in and soil for grass and flower beds was hauled in from the old Fourth street road. A beautiful park, about 75x1,000 feet, was made, and enjoyed by all in the neighborhood. All signs of the park are now being removed and the space will be covered with concrete to make a playground for the children of the neighborhood, and the old Second Avenue park will be a thing of the past. The only green breathing spot in the downtown section is gone.

With the first of this month the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. enters on its tenth year. Just nine years ago many thought its experiment would prove a failure; now everyone will admit that the firm is a necessity and its business has grown until it is now one of the leading wholesale houses of the country.

E. C. Ludwig and wife have left for Washington and the Jamestown exposition. They will return by way of New York.

J. B. Murdoch & Co. report themselves as, on the whole, well satisfied with the summer business.

Mr. Demas, of the Pittsburg Florists' Exchange, has made a trip east, looking up sources of supply for an enlarged business this fall.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Prize Essays.

Samuel Murray, of Kansas City, offers two prizes of $30 and $20 for the following essays to be presented by September 30: "Comparative Worth in the Community and to Horticulture and Floriculture."

First: The man who is a gardener and florist, having a store and conservatory in the city, conducts a high-class business; has greenhouses in the suburbs; grows plants and cut flowers for his store; has a good business in spring bedding plants and does all in his power to increase the sale of hardy perennials, setting forth to his patrons on every occasion possible the beauty and charm of the hardy flower garden plants, shrubs and trees and bulbs in the fall.

Second: The man who conducts a store and conservatory in the city has a high-class business, but does not have any greenhouses, buying all his plants and cut flowers at wholesale.

These essays were originally to have been presented at the Philadelphia convention, but because of the short notice given, the time was extended.

Department of Plant Registration.

M. H. Walsh, Woods Hole, Mass., submits for registration the following rambler roses:

Walsh's Poesy, color clear dark pink; base of the petals fading to pure white; distinct; free flowering, strong growers; flowers borne in large clusters and hanging gracefully on the plant. This variety raised in Woods Hole in 1901.

Walsh's Coquina; beautiful shell pink; lower half of petals creamy yellow; foliage glossy ivy green; profuse bloomer; single flowers.

Walsh's Cinderella, beautiful dark rose; flowers double, borne in immense clusters, shoots bearing from sixty to one hundred blooms; when fully developed flowers assume imbricated form and change to a lovely shade of light pink; one of the latest of the rambler class to flower.

Walsh's Delight, single flowers; intense carmine tipped with scarlet; lower half of petals white; most profuse bloomer; flowering from every bud on each shoot; foliage dark glossy green and a grand forcing rose.

Walsh's Evangeline, single flower; two inches in diameter; large bronzy, glossy green foliage; most vigorous grower; deliciously fragrant, suitable either for climbing or creeping in parks or shrubberies; color, soft pink and white.

Walsh's Paradise, single flowers; borne in large clusters; hardy, profuse bloomer; fragrant; petals, lower half white, upper half pink; when fully developed the petals recurve to a sharp point, forming a perfect star; center filled with yellow stamens. P. J. HAUSWIRTH, Sec'y.

LEWISTON, ME.—T. J. Allen visited Boston last week, buying fall supplies. He reports business as good and is busy with an addition to his houses.

MASON CITY, IA.—The Perth Floral Co. lost $3,000 by fire August 25. The building was completely destroyed. The loss is partly covered by insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown.

ROCHESTER, IND.—John Shelton expects to begin work at once in the enlarging of his greenhouses. The new buildings will be 45x145 feet and will be completed before the arrival of cold weather.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., George S. Green, Chicago; First Vice-pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland.

THE Dutch bulbs are now arriving and quality is excellent.

VISITED CHICAGO: J. B. Comont, representing Carter, Dunnet & Beale, London, Eng.

ALL root crops on the other side are reported to be making a light seed crop. Some of the varieties of beets are exceedingly light.

REPORTS from the onion seed fields of the central west state that the harvest is over and that the seed balls indicate a good seed yield.

THE cool weather which generally prevails over the country is reported to be bad for the sweet corn, vine seed and tomato seed crops.

BEANS are coming along all right, according to reports. Much can happen yet, however, to change the situation, especially on the Refugee and other late ripening sorts.

AT Chicago some of the onion seed that was labeled, "Eastern grown, strictly choice white," seems to be badly mixed with a mongrel yellow and red, according to the set growers who planted it.

LONG ISLAND growers of cabbage seed have harvested nearly a full crop in good shape, but the increased demand renders the supply short. Recent rains have materially improved the condition of cabbage stock for seeding 1908, and also were of great benefit to cauliflower, of which hundreds of acres are grown on Long Island for market.

THE way peas are coming in at the growing stations bears out the reports that the crop is going to be light. Some of the canners, however, say they will have a lot that got too ripe for canning and that this feature may have a bearing on the price. The best posted growers think the canners have an object in sending out these statements.

THE onion set situation is not well in hand. Opinions vary as to the actual production of the commodity. It certainly looks as though the crop is far behind that of last year in quantity. Growers are holding off for stiff prices and unless there are quantities in places that have been overlooked the indications are that stiff prices will have to be paid.

WEICHMAN & HOFFMAN, at Forest Junction, Wis., are again in the seed business.

KNUD GUNDESTRUP, Chicago, with his family, has returned from a three months' tour of European seed-growing centers.

A. M. KIRBY, head of the bulb and flower seed department of Peter Henderson & Co., New York, is the author of "Daffodils and How to Grow Them," just published by Doubleday, Page & Co.

F. W. BRUGGERHOF, president of J. M. Thorburn & Co., expresses the utmost confidence in the outcome of the season's seed crops. He says that while some varieties will undoubtedly be decidedly scarce, still enough seeds are each year produced to meet the general requirements of the trade.

F. G. JOHNSON, formerly of Columbus, O., is now with S. M. Isbell & Co., Jackson, Mich., associated with E. J. Sheap in the management of the garden seed department. Mr. Johnson was with the Livingston Seed Co. for over twenty years, but about a year ago was compelled to give up business on account of his health. He has now fully recovered.

H. FRANK DARROW, New York, has returned from his annual European trip.

THE cool weather has not hastened the growth of the late varieties of sweet corn for seed.

LESTER L. MORSE is the delegate of the American Seed Trade Association to the National Irrigation Congress.

THE tomato packers are getting a better crop and pack than was anticipated, but their market is still firm.

THE season is decidedly late, but the prospect for a fair crop of tomato seeds is better than before recent rains.

THE dealers who placed their orders in France at too low prices, for Paper Whites and Romans, have not secured full deliveries.

THE supply of valley pips in cold storage promises to equal the requirements up to the date new crop stock will be available.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued a bulletin on the spring grain-aphis, or so-called "green bug," by F. M. Webster.

ADOLPH KRUHM, of Barteldes & Co., Lawrence, Kan., is inspecting vine seed crops in western Kansas, Oklahoma and eastern Colorado.

CRENSHAW BROS. SEED CO., Tampa, Fla., does a considerable business in flower pots, plant stands, etc., buying its supplies in carload lots.

PRACTICALLY the last of the season's crop of Harrisii reached New York on the Bermudian August 23. The consignment amounted to fifty-one cases.

D. LANDRETH SEED CO. has a splendid location at Bristol, Pa., on the banks of the Delaware, and has had a good growing season, although the rainfall has been light.

THE canners report that on the whole the pea pack will exceed that of last year, but the advance orders take the entire pack of standard grades and the demand for 1908 is assured.

AN investigation of the legal aspects surrounding the non-fulfillment of orders for French bulbs shows that a contract in France is not binding unless the bulb grower's wife is a party to the written agreement.

RETAIL seedsmen say that the high quality, abundance, price and other factors which have effected so great an increase in the canning of peas, have been felt in a reduction in the retail sales of peas for seed.

The exports from Rotterdam, Holland, to the United States during the year 1906, as reported by Consul-General Listoe, include bulbs and flowers to the amount of $475,209, plants $305,076, and seeds $151,907.

SECRETARY C. E. Kendel has published, and mailed to members, the volume containing the proceedings of the twenty-fifth annual meeting of the American Seed Trade Association, held at New York June 25 to 27.

It is reported that at least two New York seed houses are seeking a way to secure legal redress from a French grower who failed to fill orders for Paper Whites and Romans which had been booked some time before.

HOLLAND BULB CROPS.

Now that both the tulip and hyacinth crops in Holland have been harvested and warehoused, it may be said that on an average the results are more satisfactory than were at first expected. The hyacinth crop in general is fine, with the exception of only a few varieties. Considering the much smaller acreage planted out this season, this must be considered rather fortunate, as under these circumstances it is likely that the supply will be able to meet the demand, which would not have been the case if the crop had been a poor one. Nevertheless, as the season is at least ten days backward it is quite evident that shipments will also be later than usual and the fine, dry weather was certainly a great boon to the growers, in securing perfect curing of the bulbs just out of the grounds.

As was at first expected, the crocus crop is a poor one and the quantities on hand will not be sufficient to meet the demand, but narcissi promise a good crop all round, although the quantities to dispose of are considerably less than last season and no surplus is likely to remain on the hands of any of the growers.

Gladioli Colvillei, says the Horticultural Trade Journal, are generally looking weak and poorly, and good stock free from disease is likely to be scarce and therefore higher in price.

ERFURT SEED CROPS.

We thought last season an unusually late one in the Erfurt district of Germany, but the present bids fair to eclipse it in this respect. A cold, late and dry spring gave everything a bad start, and low temperature, little sunshine and plenty of rain have caused vegetation, in popular phraseology, to take two steps backward to every step forward. We are now quite three weeks behind a normal season, and the result is that it is difficult to make any sort of estimate as to how the various crops will turn out.

The cabbage tribe, owing to heavy stocks, was not largely planted and looks only middling, except kales, which are flourishing. Of lettuce there is a good acreage which looks well up to date. Garden carrots are poor, but field carrots promise much better. Onions are fair, but want sun badly to bring them on. Cauliflowers are likely to turn out well, as far as we can see. Peas have suffered from the weather, but may yet yield satisfactorily. Beets look fairly well, and mangolds are coming on strongly. Swedes will be a bad crop. Parsley is all right, but parsnip and leek only moderate.

The flower fields are not looking so gay as they usually do. Perennials and biennials are off bloom, and the annuals are coming on tardily to take their places. Annual poppies, larkspurs, phlox, Indian pinks, nasturtiums, etc., are only straggling into bloom, and the last named are running too much to leaf. Sweet peas have made a strong growth and are flowering well. A large acreage is out and the critical time of the pod setting is now at hand. Asters are very backward and absolutely nothing can be said now as to their prospects. Of pansies a good crop is unfortunately hardly to be hoped for, as the moist and cloudy weather causes so many of the best flowers to drop off without setting. An army of employees is hard at work gathering each pod as it ripens and growers are yearning for some genial solar rays to ensure them some reward for their labors. Meanwhile orders are pouring in and stocks of most of the varieties are quite exhausted. On the stages, stocks look an average crop. Carnations are just peeping out, while large-flowering petunias are now at their best. Cineraria, cyclamen, calceolaria and primulas have all been seeding fairly well.

Visitors have been fairly numerous both from the other side of the "herring pond" and from this, though some had bad luck with the weather and did not even get a bird's-eye view of the flower fields.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

On revision of code—Walter P. Stokes, chairman; Horace E. Conklin and Marshall H. Duryea.

SWEET PEAS FOR SEED.

There is no gainsaying the fact that sweet peas of the Spencer type are largely given to sporting, or, to be more correct, many flowers are so formed that bees have a chance of assisting in the work of fertilization. Consequently, many seeds are the result of cross-fertilization. One may walk down rows of sweet peas and find the bees busy enough on Spencer varieties, but paying practically no attention to the older forms. Members of the cabbage family intercross so freely through wind or insect agency that for seed purposes the crops have to be grown wide apart, and so it will be with sweet peas. Those who wish to be able to distribute true stocks will have to isolate the varieties that show this sportive character.

Sweet peas are so popular, and the prospects of extended sweet pea culture are so considerable, that those growers who distribute seed that can be depended upon to yield the variety purchased will reap a large reward. It is useless to expect a sweet pea to be sufficiently fixed for distribution in its second year, and unless the same care is taken with sweet peas as with many other florists' flowers, growers will unquestionably defeat the ends they have in view. Every raiser wants to put his new varieties on the market as soon as possible, and his hurry is the greater because he fears someone else may have the same sport or seedling and forestall him. Vegetable Forcing.

TOLEDO, O.—Searles Bros. are building five houses, each 750 feet long. They grow vegetables and will install the Skinner system for watering.

HORSERADISH will grow almost anywhere, but the best and most tender roots are produced in a rich, deep and rather moist soil. It is propagated by planting pieces of the roots, any portion of which will grow, no matter if buried deeply in the earth.

JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE.

The Jerusalem artichoke is a hardy, tuberous rooted perennial, a native of Brazil. It must not be supposed that this plant is an artichoke; it is only so called because it resembles that vegetable in flower and not because it belongs to the same family. Neither is it a native of Jerusalem, that word in this instance being merely a corruption of the Italian name girasole. In England the tubers of the Jerusalem artichoke are made use of in much larger quantities than in this country, and they are much liked by some people when cooked in various ways. The tubers are baked, roasted and boiled and are served with milk or butter. Their flavor, when properly cooked, is quite agreeable, and as a food they are far from being unpalatable. The Jerusalem artichoke thrives in almost any kind of soil and situation. It is propagated by planting small entire tubers or pieces of larger ones, just like the potato. The sets may be planted any time from the beginning of February to the end of March, in shallow trenches, or may be dibbled into holes one foot apart and the rows three feet asunder. R. R.

GRAPES UNDER GLASS.

Kindly tell me what is the best treatment for forcing the Muscat of Alexandria grape. What are the best fertilizers for it? H. Y. B. E.

To fully answer this query would necessitate a minute description of grape culture from start to finish. This would easily fill all the pages of a few editions of the REVIEW. Only a few of the more important points, therefore, can be treated here.

Assuming that the vines are already established plants, planted in a suitable house, with suitable borders, the first thing of importance is to have the house and vines thoroughly cleaned before starting. This is done by either washing or painting the woodwork of the house, removing the loose bark from the vines and washing them with a solution of Gishurst's compound or other good insecticide. About two inches of the surface soil should be removed all over the house; then a good coat of manure or bone meal should be given and lightly forked in. After a good watering, this should be covered with about two inches of fresh soil. It is a good plan to alternate the fertilizers, giving well rotted cow manure one year and bone meal the next.

The temperature to start should be 40 to 45 degrees at night, with a rise of from 10 to 15 degrees by day, increasing at the rate of about 5 degrees a week until a night temperature of 65 degrees has been attained.

The vines should be lightly sprinkled twice a day from the time of starting until the vines come into flower, when sprinkling of the vines should be discontinued, but the floor of the house should be sprinkled several times during the warmest part of the day, to help maintain sufficient moisture in the atmosphere. The old theory was to keep the atmosphere of the house as dry as possible during the flowering period, but from personal experience I find that a much better set is procured with the assistance of atmospheric moisture.

Disbudding, pinching and tying must be attended to as required. By disbudding I mean the removing of all surplus shoots from around the spurs as soon as the strongest can be selected. This should always be left where possible, but as the position of the shoot must be taken into consideration, it is sometimes better to remove a stronger shoot and leave a weaker, on account of its being in a better position. The shoots nearest the vine are the best to leave, as this helps to shorten the length of spur. Several bunches will often appear on a shoot, but all should be removed except one, and the point of the shoot should be pinched out three joints beyond the fruit. All lateral shoots that appear between the bunch and the rod should be removed and those beyond the bunch should be pinched back to one eye. The lateral shoot produced by this eye should again be pinched to one eye, and so on, as long as the shoots continue to appear.

Copious waterings should be given, according as the border shows signs of dryness, the last being given when the grapes are about to show the first signs of coloring.

Feeding must be regulated according to the condition of the soil. In a house where the vines have been several years planted, feeding should be given about four times during the watering season. Applied in liquid form, it is most effective and quickest in action. Liquid made from sheep manure is about as good as can be applied.

The temperature to be maintained during the growing season is 65 degrees at night and from 75 to 80 degrees by day, according to the brightness of the weather. But after the grapes are thoroughly ripe, if it is desired to hang them on the vines for any length of time, the temperature should be lowered about 15 degrees and all possible air allowed, to prevent damping.

Thinning should be done as soon as the berries begin to stone. This period can be discerned by the swelling of the berries; those improperly fertilized will stop swelling shortly after setting; so the smaller ones should always be removed and the larger ones left. The proper amount of thinning cannot be described, but can only be learned by experience. The operator must know the size the berry will finally attain and allow ample room for each to swell, so that when finished the berries will touch but not crush each other, which they would in the case of being left too thick. On the other hand, if too severely thinned the bunch when cut, instead of being stiff enough to retain its shape, will be loose and lie flat when laid on its side.

Muscat of Alexandria grape is not one of the easiest to grow. The chief trouble with it is during the setting period; hence it is not advisable to force it very early, as the principal agency towards a good set is sunshine. If started not earlier than the middle of February, by the time the flowering period arrives bright sunshine can usually be depended on. This, combined with atmospheric moisture, will usually insure a good set.

RAWSON'S HOTHOUSE CUCUMBER

As a forcing Cucumber is one of the largest and most profitable crops of the Market Gardener, it is essential that the very best possible strain should be sown. With this idea in view we have made selections for the past few years from our Rawson's White Spine, which have resulted in a strain about two inches longer and a darker green in color, with a few light spines showing at blossom end. This new strain we confidently believe to be superior to any other on the market. The results we have had at our own greenhouses with the stock conclusively prove the above to be true. ½ oz., 35c; oz., 60c; 4 oz., $1.50; lb., $5.00.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-pres., G. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 33d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June, 1908.

J. HENRY CLARK, of Wheelock & Clark, Fredonia, N. Y., was stricken with apoplexy August 23. He is 60 years of age.

E. P. BOSWORTH, an agent for the Fairview Nursery Co., Rochester, died of heart failure in the postoffice at West Derry, N. H., August 21.

THE demand for shrubs is reported stronger than ever by some of the nurserymen in the Mississippi valley. There seems no limit to the demand in this section.

It is stated that the indebtedness of the Central Michigan Nursery, Kalamazoo, Mich., is approximately $100,000 and the best offer for its assets is $12,000.

S. C. MOON, Morrisville, Pa., says that in his experience the rule for the one transplanting trees or shrubs should be: "Get all the roots you can, and keep all the roots you get."

THE Corn Belt Nursery Co., Bloomington, Ill., has been incorporated with $10,000 authorized capital stock. The incorporators are Burton J. Vandervoort, Louis Denning and U. G. Owens.

THE landscape architect advises the people to beware of the man who will make a plan free, or at nominal cost, but who expects the property owner to buy of him the stock to execute the plan.

THE Department of Agriculture estimates the average condition of the apple crop of the whole United States as 39.4 per cent. In New York it is 65 per cent and in Missouri only 10 per cent.

CALIFORNIA PRIVET.

It has been observed on occasions after California privet suffered injury during a severe early frost in autumn, or a late frost in spring, that plants which had been moved the autumn previously were unharmed. In consideration of this it will be well for those intending to plant privet in large numbers this autumn or next spring to do as much as possible of the work in the autumn in order that the plants will at least be reasonably sure of a fair start.

In planting privet for a hedge, it may be desirable to make provision for the protection, not only of the hedge itself from heavy accumulations of snow in winter, but also to construct it so that it will be effective in some measure in protecting the area which it is intended to enclose from some kinds of animals, bipeds and quadrupeds. Therefore it may be well to plant the hedge double, but it is doubtful if it is in any way desirable to plant double if those considerations are not present.

A great deal depends on the foundation laid for a hedge at first, in regard to its ultimate success, and for that reason, when the trench is dug, if the soil is not fairly rich it ought to be made so by the addition of a generous portion of good manure, cow manure preferably, always taking care, however, to cover the manure with soil before placing the plants in the trench.

As a precaution, it will be well to cover the surface of the soil, when the plants are in place, with coarse stable manure to the depth of three or four inches. This can be removed in the spring or allowed to remain and, in case it may be in a location rendering it objectionable, it may be lightly covered with soil.

EDUCATE THE PUBLIC.

[A paper by J. A. Stewart, of Christopher, Wash., read at the recent convention of the Pacific Coast Nurserymen's Association.]

Nurserymen ought to educate the public and illustrate the difference between good and bad nursery stock. I believe that the nurserymen, as a rule, are getting into line to furnish the public with good, healthy, high-grade and true-to-name trees and plants. The horticultural laws have helped us to be more painstaking in our work and a better class of trees is now being turned out than would otherwise have been, without these restrictions. No matter what line of business you are in, or what article you wish to purchase, one has continually to be on his guard to see that he gets the goods he wants, otherwise he may be fooled or perhaps persuaded to take a substitute. The public in general does not know the difference between superior and inferior nursery stock. It is a commodity altogether difthis particular, how many really know whether or not they have got what they ordered? As a rule they have to rely on others and they in turn on some reliable nurseryman.

What is a Good Tree.

Is a good tree the one that has made the most vigorous growth and stands conspicuously among its fellows, or, on the other hand, is it the tree that has had a hard struggle to grow and has been hardened and perhaps dwarfed by reason of its poor cultivation and care and adverse environment? I hold that it is neither of these types which is best, but the happy medium; the one which develops a tree which does not rush too much to wood, but as it grows has time to harden and mature its structure in its gradual development of leaf and bud.

To raise a superior tree it must be nursed from the start to the finish. You must see to it that your seedling stock is clean and vigorous, one-year-old preferable, being free from all diseases. After it has been lined out in the nursery row and your ground kept clean of weeds and cultivated regularly, it is time to bud and graft. The selection of your buds and scions is a most important matter, if you would be sure that the variety is true to name.

I will not bring in here the question of pedigree stock, although I believe there is a great deal in it. Vigilance must attend it all along the line of its growth, as disease may attack it any time. A first-class tree is the one that is budded or grafted on such stock, and any other, to my mind, such as home grafts and cut backs, is inferior and ought to be classed with inferior stock and belong to the category of diseased, crooked, forked, too low crowned, roots cut too short, not true to name trees, as against clean, straight, well-rooted, healthy trees.

I come to superior and inferior nursery stock as regards its name and variety. We know that there are many varieties that are really worthless; there are also some varieties that do well in some localities and will not do well in another. There are also some new sorts that are advertised and many flattering things said about them. These may be worthless and many of them are.

Duties of Nurserymen.

We, as nurserymen, ought to post ourselves and know the best in every class, the most suitable and best adapted to our own locality, and other localities as well. Propagate the best and recommend them to the planters. In selling trees by agents, the agent has in many instances the opportunity to select the varieties, and can recommend pretty nearly the whole selection, so that it is an important matter to have your salesman well posted about the varieties.

There is quite a temptation to some to get a new variety on the market and advertise it and sell it at an exorbitant price before it has been thoroughly tested. I believe that our experiment stations ought to do this work of testing new varieties. Let us work together for each other's good. If you have really a good thing in some new variety, you ought certainly to be compensated for it, and others should be allowed the benefit of it too. The worst feature under this head is the untrue-to-name variety. In our business there is a wide scope for dishonesty and rascality. Some have no regard for their reputation in mixing stock and substituting promiscuously other varieties. A person who does this sort of business certainly has no conscience and he ought to be ostracized from the business. It is one of the worst crimes laid to the unreliable nurseryman. SACRAMENTO, CAL.—The Fifteenth National Irrigation Congress will be in session here September 2 to 7.

EVERETT, WASH.—Trubshaw & Ferguson are building a big greenhouse near the Wye in Snohomish to grow lettuce for this market.

SPOKANE, WASH.—The Spokane Floral Association announces that silver medals will be awarded for the best displays at the twelfth annual aster show in connection with the Spokane Interstate Fair, September 23 to October 5. Exhibits are expected from Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Montana and British Columbia.

Six century plants, with variegated leaves, are said to be blooming at one time in the Sutro gardens, at San Francisco, Cal. They are on the upper parapet, overlooking the sea. Assistant Gardener Coleman says that they were moved from different parts of the garden to this point ten or twelve years ago.

IRRIGATION FOR ROSES.

The use of irrigation in the growing of outdoor roses, when the plants are to be used for greenhouse forcing, is a subject that should be carefully studied by the prospective planter, as the condition in which the plants are replanted in hot-house beds has a great effect on their subsequent failure or success.

In a broad sense, there is a much greater chance for a succession of heavy crops from stock that is grown without irrigation than when considerable moisture has been used. The popular idea, that the best results are to be obtained from the largest plants, irrespective of the real condition the plant may be in, has dominated the growers, and much stock is transplanted into houses that is far from being in condition to immediately respond to heat and moisture, and too often it will rest a long time, together with the attending dying back of more or less wood, before it responds vigorously to its new conditions.

Under ordinary circumstances it is not necessary for a hardy rose when grown outdoors to have a resting spell in the middle of summer. Nature intended such a time to take place with the approach and continuation of cold weather. But when this is circumvented by artificial heat at the time the rose expects its holiday the plant must have received a reasonable amount of forced drying off previously if it is to be expected to continue its good work. Were it not for the fact that the soil becomes impoverished from the constant drain on its supply of nitrogenous matter and also that the rose is usually overforced, it should live and bloom for many seasons, if other conditions were equal.

If the weather is warm there is always danger in handling roses that have been grown in the nursery rows, where artificial watering has been resorted to. If the weather is cool they can probably be transplanted safely enough, but they will be very slow in starting. Again, roses that are irrigated usually make a few very long roots and there is an absence of fibers, which is always conducive to a long wait before they leaf out. The greatest trouble, however, is from the fact that the stock has not had a sufficient resting season and, whether it dies back or not, it is bound to take a long rest before it makes much of a showing. Consequently the season is often well over before anything is accomplished in the flowering line.

Roses grown without irrigation, whether on their own roots or budded or grafted, are always more satisfactory to planters. They will stand more neglect and more extremes of temperature, have better roots, do not need as much trimming and will respond with much more alacrity to their new environments than any other kind. This is on the same lines as the artificial drying up of rose beds in the summer before they are started again in the fall.

The Market.

Business continues well down, as far as receipts are concerned. There have been some funeral orders, and these have helped to use up quite a portion of the surplus white stock. There is little being offered in the line of fancy stock of any kind. Roses are fair, considering the time of year. A few very good Bridesmaids are being shown from Burlingame, but with other sorts there is nothing in season.

Carnations are still scarce, as there is but little being cut from the newly planted stock. The shortage of white varieties still continues, and it will be several weeks before we have our usual quota.

Asters are being brought into town in enormous quantities, particularly the short-stemmed flowers. The prices on these are not worth quoting, as they can be bought for almost any price offered. They will last about two weeks yet, and then will become scarcer.

From appearances the chrysanthemums will be in evidence in a short time. The acreage that is devoted to them is not quite so extensive as in former years, and whether there will be sufficient or not to supply the demand can better be told later.

Japanese lilies are in good demand and are paying the growers well for their trouble. Amaryllis of the early variety are drawing to their close and have not proven good sellers. The later flowered sorts are beginning to be seen, and they appear to be better sellers.

Valley moves slowly. Colored gladioli and dahlias are a positive glut in the market. All other kinds of hardy stock move slowly, with the exception of sweet peas, and they are much scarcer, particularly the long-stemmed stock. The weather continues cool, with prospects of its unlimited continuance.

DES MOINES, IA.

Twenty-five of the flower growers of Iowa gathered in the headquarters of the Horticultural Society at the State House August 28 for the fifth annual meeting of the Society of Iowa Florists. Although the convention was not large, a very enthusiastic session was held. Vice-President Judson A. Kramer, of Cedar Rapids, was elected president and Charles N. Page, of Des Moines, succeeded himself. Secretary Wesley Green was reelected, and Peter Lambert, of Des Moines, was made treasurer, vice W. A. Harkett, of Dubuque.

A paper by J. T. D. Fulmer, of Des Moines, who is detained in the east, on "Bedding Plants, Their Use and Abuse," was read by the secretary. The following papers were read by the authors: "Cannas," J. T. Temple, of Davenport; "Thrips and Red Spider," Wm. Trilow, of Des Moines; "Color Effects in Arranging Flowers," M. K. Zimmer, of Woodbine, and "The Best Method of Glazing Greenhouses," by J. A. Kramer.

The next convention will be held in Des Moines during fair week in 1908. It was decided to hold a two days' convention next year, as one session gave insufficient time in which to accomplish the work.

OLD SOIL FOR CARNATIONS.

I sowed some buckwheat on old carnation soil in the benches, intending after it was partly grown to turn it under, leave it there for a short time and then plant the carnations in it. It is now in bloom, but we are a little fearful of the result. Will you kindly advise us what it will be best to do, as our carnations are ready to come in? C. C. N.

We have never tried the experiment of sowing buckwheat on any indoor benches and doubt if it pays for the trouble involved. While some fertility may be added to the soil by sowing buckwheat, cowpeas, red clover, rye and some other quick growing crops, when we consider that you need to water these crops as you would your carnations and that to cover any of these crops properly involves considerable labor, we do not think it worth the candle.

Seeing, however, that your crop is grown, turn it under without delay. We fear it will give you considerable trouble to cover it properly and, when replanting your carnations, it will be found a nuisance. It never pays to plant carnations or any other indoor crops in old soil. We know it is often done, but you will never find successful growers using anything but new compost. You should add a liberal coating of well rotted barn manure to your soil, and some ground bone.

Another year, clean out the old soil, spread it on your land, seed down and in two or three seasons you will have fairly good compost to plow up for use.

The Market.

All along the line there seems to be an increase in business; it is not yet marked, but the general average shows it. There is much more activity among the buyers and the calls for stock are more frequent. As the schools and colleges will begin to open in a few days, those persons who have been spending the vacation in the various summer resorts are beginning to arrive home, and this is always the signal for the start of the fall business. With the advent of the mum at the end of this month everything will be in full swing.

Roses are in heavier supply and are not selling quite so well. The better quality of them sell well, and at good prices, but the short-stemmed ones move slowly. There are many more Beauties coming than we have seen for some time. They sell well, too, and bring good prices. A few carnations are coming in and the supply will increase gradually from day to day. They are selling well, and more could be used to advantage. Asters are going well now. The best quality sell out clean at good prices. There are not nearly so many of the poorer grades coming in, and even these are selling now. Gladioli are not in so much of a glut now, and there is some prospect of getting a respectable price for them. They certainly have been bringing next to nothing this season, and it is to be hoped that what are left will be able to redeem themselves a little. Dahlias are still selling poorly. It is hard to move them at any price. We are in hopes of doing better with them soon, though. Some good lilies are to be had and they sell well. With the exception of smilax, this market is well supplied with green goods, and they are selling well.

Various Notes.

The forty-eighth annual harvest home of Green township was held Thursday, August 29, and the flower display this year was the best that was ever seen there. Fred Gear acted as judge, and he awarded to H. Koester five prizes, to Philip Berlier five prizes and to H. Reutenschroer two prizes.

The next regular meeting of the Florists' Society will be held in the club room Saturday, September 14. A good meeting is looked forward to.

Mrs. Anna Garges will leave this week for a vacation, which she will spend mostly in Louisville.

Martin Reunkauf, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., is in town. He has introduced an innovation this trip by bringing a large line of samples with him, which he has on exhibition at the Gibson House.

BUFFALO.The Market.

The weather conditions in Buffalo continue to keep very cool and dry. As a result asters are not up to the standard. Up to date the quantity has been large enough, but the quality is away off. The best asters are bringing 2 cents, which is far better than last year. Sweet peas are about over with for this season.

Old Home Week.

Decorations are the order of the day in Buffalo now, celebrating Old Home week, and the florists have been very loyal to the occasion. W. J. Palmer & Son have a miniature arch of white asters, representing the gate of the city, with all trains leading to it. The show which attracted the attention of the passing crowd was a farmyard scene in S. A. Anderson's window. This window certainly is worthy of praise, for it is original in every way. It pictures Buffalo years ago, as the people left it to seek their fortunes. The whole city is ablaze with lights and decorations of all kinds, and Buffalo expects more visitors than we had at any one time during the Pan-American year.

On Wednesday, August 28, the Scott Floral Co. held its annual picnic, scoring the usual success. R. A. S.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COL.Flower Show.

The flower show of the El Paso County Horticultural Society, held in this city, came to a close Friday, August 23. It was the greatest show ever held by the society. The exhibits, attendance and receipts were larger than ever before. There were over 3,500 paid admissions, besides the annual tickets and the passes. All the professional exhibits were good, the honors being divided among the local florists.

An important feature of the show was the large exhibit by Mr. Fohn, head gardener for General Palmer. This was not for competition and was afterward given to the society by General Palmer. It comprised some of the best begonias ever seen in Colorado, besides ferns, geraniums, pelargoniums, gloxinias and an imported variety of lobelia, the flowers of which were almost as large as vincas.

The exhibit of wild flowers by Mrs. S. B. Walker, of Salida, also attracted a great deal of attention.

The first prize for a general collection of dahlias went, as usual, to W. W. Wilmore, the dahlia specialist of Denver, his exhibit being almost perfect.

G. Fleischer, of Pueblo, who attended the show, reported the building of five large houses and the installation of a fine new boiler costing $1,000, and he had to hurry home to superintend the work.

K. S. CLARKE.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.—The Tarrytown Horticultural Society has issued the premium list for the ninth annual exhibition, to be held November 6 to 8. E. W. Neu-brand, of the F. R. Pierson Co., is secretary.

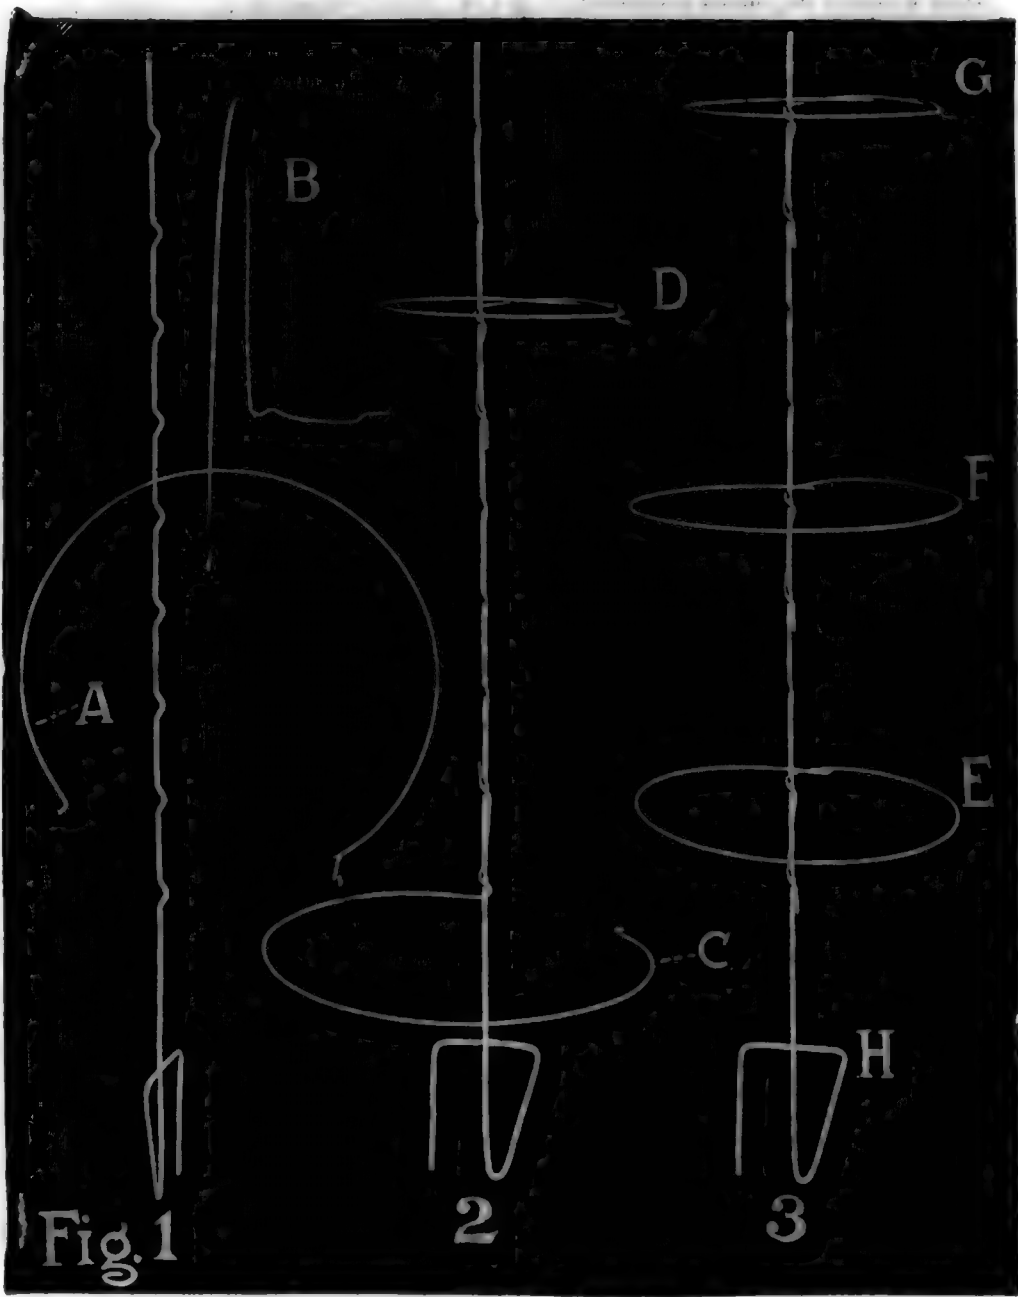

IT IS SURPRISING

Every Carnation Grower who has put our Common Sense Carnation Support to a practical test has demonstrated to himself the necessity of its use over that of the present stringing method or any of the other so-called Wire Carnation Supports.

The old-fashioned, slow, expensive stringing method costs you more money and embodies continual work during the season of plant growth.

Other so-called Wire Carnation Supports are puzzles in construction, troublesome to maintain and impractical to a great degree, and usually after a season's trial get in the junk pile.

The Common Sense Carnation Support

DESCRIPTION: Fig. 1—A 2-ft. Galvanized Stake that will hold 1 to 9 rings. Fig. 2—Explains its construction. A-B—The open wire rings. C—Open and close ring by the simple twist of the spring wire ring and yield to form around the plant. E-F-G—Closed rings ready for service. H—The anchor that firmly holds the support and keeps it standing erect.

The Common Sense Carnation Support is simplicity in construction, and when in position among the carnation plants in the bench they work right—fit every plant and stay permanently until removed with the plants.

The Common Sense Support is easy to put up, easy to apply to the plant—easy to be removed and taken apart.

When out of use the stakes and rings are bundled separately, like the ordinary Galvanized Wire or Cane Stakes. The Common Sense Carnation Support IS A SURE THING, and undoubtedly a standard article.

Before we introduced it to the trade we prepared in advance for the expected demands. A sample 100 two-ring Support for $1.60.

CARNATION SARAH HILL, ACTUAL SIZE.

SARAH HILL

The largest free-flowering white carnation ever produced; the form is beautiful and displays the size to the very best advantage; color very pure; texture excellent; stem extra long at all times of the year; a startling novelty, producing flowers with great freedom. Grandest novelty for 1908.

Lawson-Enchantress or SUPERIOR

At last we can give you Enchantress with Lawson color. This is not a sport from Enchantress, but a seedling, but it resembles Enchantress in every respect. Guaranteed to be as we represent it. Every one who grows Lawson or Enchantress will want to grow this variety. Early delivery as yet.

MANCHESTER, MASS.

The North Shore Horticultural Society held its summer exhibition August 28 and 29. The judges were Julius Huerlin, of South Braintree; George Gordon, Beverly Cove, and Charles Simpkins, of Peabody.

The R. & J. Farquhar cup for vegetables was won by William Irwin, gardener to Mrs. Gordon Abbott, and the Lilleothea cup for vegetables was won by James Salter, gardener to Mrs. Philip Dexter.

Best collection of tomatoes was won by William Irwin.

Best collection of fruit went to R. C. Hooper; Wm. Swan, gardener.

For foliage and flowering plants arranged for effect, the Lord & Burnham cup went to William Swan.

For best display of annuals and flowers grown from seed planted the season of 1907, the silver cup offered by Schlegel & Fottler was won by Mrs. James McMillan, Fred Brasch gardener, who also was first for collection of gladioli.

Mrs. Lester Leland, Eric Wetterlow gardener, was first for collection of ferns, for tuberous begonias in pots and also cut. Mrs. E. S. Grew, E. A. Parsons gardener, was second for collection of ferns.

Mrs. Jas. McMillan was first for dahlias. J. J. Middleton won on sweet peas. Miss Silsbee had the best white-flowered annuals, and Mrs. Higginson, J. P. Scott gardener, the best herbaceous display, Wm. Swan leading on phloxes.

Other features were a collection of orchids from Lager & Hurrell, Nephrolepis Superbissima from F. R. Pierson Co., aquatics and Nephrolepis AmerpohlII and N. Todeaoides from Henry A. Dreer, collection of dahlias from W. W. Rawson, and seedling perennials from the Blue Hill Nurseries. B. H. Tracy staged a fine exhibit of gladioli.

Mrs. W. Scott Fetz, Walter Allen gardener, had a group of trained plants, both flower and fruit, and Mrs. E. S. Grew had a group of stove and greenhouse plants. The show was held in a tent 60x140, weather conditions being favorable both days. W. T.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—August Reutz, 3242 Dauphine street, has been in Charity hospital for treatment for a spider's bite.

EL PASO, ILL.—Elmer Hitch, while working at his greenhouses recently, fell from a scaffold, striking a glass partition and cutting his arm just below the elbow. He was doing well according to last reports, but it will be some time before he will be able to work again.

BUTLER, PA.

Gladiolus Display.

At the annual exhibition of the Butler County Agricultural Society, held at Butler, Pa., August 20 to 24, Jesse A. Heydrick made an exhibit of gladiolus blooms, which was quite unusual at such exhibitions and a very meritorious one.

Mr. Heydrick has been growing these bulbs for twenty-five years and, although he is not a florist, is an expert in the growing of gladioli. He had on exhibition, on this occasion, about 6,000 of the finest blooms, 2,500 of which he produced from seedlings grown in his own garden. Many of these were rare and beautiful. The balance of the exhibit was furnished to Mr. Heydrick by John Lewis Childs and Arthur Cowee, who are well-known growers.

This display was arranged along one side of a long hall and the stems were inserted in long boxes filled with sand, which was damp, thus keeping the blooms fresh during the four days of the exhibition. This display was doubtless the finest ever made in the floral line at any fair in Pennsylvania. As the work of an amateur grower, Mr. Heydrick's success in producing new and fine seedlings, in this line, has been marvelous. He has 20,000 bulbs in his collection this year.

PEACE ON BOTH SIDES.

A traveling salesman died suddenly in Pittsburg, Pa., and some of his friends telegraphed to the undertaker an order to make a large wreath. Investigation showed that the telegram ordering the wreath read as follows:

"Rest in peace," on both sides of the ribbon; if there should be room, "We shall meet in heaven."

The undertaker was out of town and the new assistant handled the job. It was a startling floral piece which turned up at the funeral. The ribbon was extra wide and it bore the inscription:

"Rest in peace on both sides and if there is room we shall meet in heaven."—Judge.

WAPPINGERS FALLS, N. Y.—The Wappingers Dahlia Society will hold its seventh annual exhibition in Park hall September 20 and 21. A number of the New York and Philadelphia seed houses have contributed to the premium list.

DUBUQUE, IA.—The tenth annual picnic of the Dubuque Gardeners' Association was held at Shooting park August 14. The picnic was preceded by a street carnival, and prizes were awarded for the best decorated flower, fruit and vegetable wagons.

DO IT NOW. Waiting means suicide. I always act as quickly as I think, and have been successful; learn and do it likewise.

ARAUCARIAS our specialty. Watch us grow.

1907 is our 12th anniversary in a successful career in the importation, growing and shipping of those well-known and well admired evergreen decorative plants.

The Araucaria Excelsa, Robusta, Compacta and Excelsa Glauca. Our importation this spring, 1907, has swollen up to the enormous amount of 6,000. More are coming on with the azaleas, Sept. and Oct. By buying now your plants will grow into money 100 per cent in 2 or 3 months. Next in rank come our Nephrolepis or Ferns, of which we have only the best selling varieties. A big lot of Boston, Elegantissima, Whitmani and Scottii. Have 3 large houses full in all salable sizes; all pot-grown, not bench grown. Our ferns are not forced or grown in shady houses, but were grown in sunny houses; ventilators open day and night. Such treatment makes hardy, stiff fronds and strong, stout plants. Can be shipped 5,000 miles without injury in transportation.

Now is the best time to ship; as you can ship safely by freight.

Please discontinue our carnation adv. as we are entirely out of plants. Sold 20,000 carnation plants in four weeks.—Geo. E. Beal, Creal Springs, Ill., Sept. 2, 1907.

This is only one of the many testimonials that we receive each week. The Review brings results, and it's natural that it should, for it has more paid-in-advance subscribers than any of its competitors.

We still have about 3500 first-class, field-grown carnations. The first who order will take them at $5.00 per 100 for Enchantress and $4.00 per 100 for Lawson, Harlowarden, Bountiful and Boston Market. Smaller plants, $3.00 per 100. We know this is a bargain, and before next spring those who buy will appreciate the fact. Satisfaction guaranteed. Cash or C. O. D. Alice E. Wood, Grand Ledge, Mich.

Carnation plants, healthy and of fair planting size, so don't think we are asking too much.

Greenhouse Heating.

THE bureau of plant industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, has in contemplation a study of the various systems of greenhouse heating as the basis for a bulletin on the subject.

STEAM FOR COMPLETE RANGE.

My greenhouses all run east and west, and are situated on the south slope of a hill in eastern Minnesota. All are set well into the hillside and thoroughly well banked.

House No. 1, which is on the lowest part of the hillside, is 12x104 feet, and seven feet and a half to the ridge. It is a violet house, has wood walls three feet high and is now piped for hot water, with a 2½-inch pipe on one side and three 1½-inch returns on the other. The boiler-room is at the west end of this house.

At the north side of the boiler-room, and extending part way along the north side of House No. 1, is House No. 2, joined at its east end by a narrower house, House No. 3, which also extends eastward, parallel with the east part of House No. 1. Thus Houses No. 2 and No. 3, standing end to end, extend the full length of the boiler-room and House No. 1.

House No. 2 is 24x75 feet, and fourteen feet to the ridge. It is even-span and has cement walls, banked or protected, with two feet of glass between the wall and the gutter on the south side. I wish to pipe for steam, maintaining a temperature of 55 to 60 degrees.

House No. 3 is 14x53 feet. Its south wall is cement and protected, with two feet of glass between the top of the wall and the gutter. The north wall is the side of a warehouse in part, and the balance is wood, made thoroughly warm and banked. I wish to heat with steam to 45 or 50 degrees.

Extending northward from House No. 3 are two warehouses, the combined length of which is sixty-six feet, and at the north end of the warehouses is a lean-to greenhouse, 12x42 feet. There is also an office at the northwest corner of the warehouses. The two warehouses, office and lean-to greenhouse will not be used during the cold winter months. The lean-to greenhouse faces a much frequented street and is intended merely for a display room during the spring, summer and early fall. I wish to run pipe enough, the length of the warehouses, to reach the office and lean-to greenhouse, so as to supply the necessary heat during the spring weather.

Can the pipes now in House No. 1 be used for return steam, from the flow pipe in Houses No. 2 and No. 3, and get heat sufficient for violets? Also kindly suggest the size, and style or type of boiler which would be most suitable, and which would also have capacity for an additional house, to be erected another season, a duplicate of House No. 2.

under the ridge and six 1¼-inch returns on the side walls or under the benches.

House No. 2 requires a 2½-inch riser under the ridge, running direct from the boiler to the far end of the house and returning through fifteen 1¼-inch returns arranged beneath the benches.

House No. 3 can, best be heated by an independent 2-inch riser from the boiler along the wall of House No. 2, into House No. 3, to the far end of No. 3 under the ridge, and returning through nine 1¼-inch returns. This riser can be branched between Houses No. 2 and No. 3, and carried through the warehouse and storehouse to heat the office and lean-to greenhouse. A 2-inch pipe will be sufficient for this, on the basis stated. The lean-to greenhouse should have seven 1¼-inch returns installed, and from these a single 1¼-inch return direct to the boiler. A boiler to do this work, and care for an additional house 24x75, should be rated for 2,000 square feet of radiation. L. C. C.

PIPING IN WESTERN NEW YORK.

I have two new greenhouses, running east and west. The south house is 12x70 feet and is connected on the south side with an old greenhouse, which runs parallel with it. The north house is 11x70 feet, and on the north side of it is a propagating house, five feet wide. There are no partitions between these houses. I wish to heat these new houses, including the propagating house, with hot water, maintaining a temperature of 50 degrees in zero weather.

The south house contains two solid beds, and I have planned to heat the south bed from the old greenhouse, by means of four 1½-inch returns. In this house I would also place a 2-inch flow, which would have two 2-inch returns in the south house and two 2-inch returns in the north house, thus aiding in the heating of both houses. In the north house would be another 2-inch flow, with three 2-inch returns in that house and three 2-inch returns in the propagating house. Please let me know what you think of my plan. ing your greenhouse and propagating shed is one which should work well. STRENGTH OF GLASS.

We contemplate erecting a greenhouse 29x100 in an exposed locality and would like to know the relative strength of glass 16x24 inches and 20x30 inches. We plan to use the second quality in double strength, setting the sashbars either sixteen or twenty inches apart. The wind sometimes is as high as sixty miles an hour. Will there be danger of breakage by wind or snow with the large glass?

F. D. S

We would have no hesitation in using double thick glass with the bars twenty inches apart. As a matter of fact, we are using double thick glass with bars twenty-four inches apart in a great deal of our work, and we never have had reports of trouble from breakage by the wind. The only case where we have had any trouble was in one instance where heavy, wet snow accumulated on the roof. In this case our customer had no heat near the eaves, but a heating pipe has since been put in and we do not anticipate any further trouble.

The Market.

There is little to be said about the cut flower business, as everything is quiet, although August business was up to the average. Some houses report a little more than in the corresponding month last year.

Flowers are sufficient for the demand. Asters are abundant and of excellent quality. Gladioli also are plentiful and good. Dahlias are also abundant, but some not so good as in previous years, Van den Dael, perhaps, being the finest, and they will soon be over. Roses are still on the short side of the market, though good for the season. Some excellent long and medium stemmed Beauties have been seen, and such sell well. Some good Richmond roses are arriving, but

Various Notes.

One of the events of the week was the reception to Secretary of War Taft. Thomas F. Walsh tendered him a breakfast at his country place, where the decorations were fine. There were also excellent decorations at the luncheon in the Brown Palace hotel, the predominating colors being red, white and blue, done by the Park Floral Co.

Another event was the annual flower show of the El Paso County Horticultural Society, at Colorado Springs. The only exhibitor from Denver was W. W. Wilmore, the dahlia specialist, who had a fine exhibit and took most of the leading prizes in that class. Among his prize winners worthy of note in the decorative class might be mentioned Lavender Beauty, Mme. Van den Dael, Gloire de Lyon and Lucy Fawcett. E. S. K.

Trade is still quiet and good stock scarce. Some new roses are coming in now and are fairly good. Few carnations are to be seen on this market at present, but the supply will be much greater this season. There will be at least one-third more carnation plants grown than in any previous year. Gladioli are still plentiful and good. Some good asters are seen on the market and the choice stock finds ready sale, while the poorer grades are hard to move at any price.

This being state fair week and also home-coming week, large crowds are expected. The city is nicely decorated with flags and bunting for the occasion.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club held its regular meeting August 27 and a large crowd turned out. After a short meeting they all turned in at the bowling alleys and had a pleasant time and also made some good scores. Reichert, Torrey and McKellar were the high rollers.

Mr. Metzmaier has completed his new house and has it planted with carnations.

C. A. Roth built his new house 20x100 over his carnation beds, and reports them looking fine.

Mrs. E. M. Krauss and sister are back at their post after a pleasant vacation.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. is putting in two seventy horse-power boilers at the new plant and will soon be in shape with the entire plant.

All the boys are back from their vacations and all feeling fine to face the rush of the coming season. J. M.

At H. F. Crawford's place in Montello the houses are being chiefly devoted to roses this season. A new house, 52x165, is planted with 3,000 Brides and Maids. Another is filled with Richmond, while Kaiserin occupies another. Of the latter some nice flowers are now being cut. One house has the center benches planted with Carnation Fair Maid and sides with Asparagus Sprenger. All the stock is looking thrifty. F. J. Dodd is the grower in charge.

W. W. Hathaway reports that summer trade has been extremely good, there being something doing all the time. Brockton is growing rapidly in population and wealth and will in the near future use double the quantity of flowers now being sold.

Marshall, who recently took the Copeland Street Greenhouses, is cutting some extra fine, long-stemmed asters under glass. He is growing a miscellaneous stock.

Mr. Paterson has nearly completed five houses 30x200 feet each, which are filled with carnations and mums. He has 10,000 roses, 10,000 mums and 35,000 carnations. He grows the best and newest varieties of these. The Market.

Business conditions are about the same as last reported. The retail business is quiet, with the exception of funeral work, which seems to have had a fairly good demand. The light shades of blooms are quickly bought up, while the darker shades hang on and many see the dump.

Carnations are failing fast and seldom produce a first-class bloom. Roses are coming in nicely, with fairly good stems. The outdoor stock is doing well. Gladioli are coming in plentifully. Hollyhocks are abundant; the white variety is mostly called for. Hydrangeas can be had in large quantities and are selling well, especially white. Asters are still coming in heavily and many of our retail stores are showing a large display in their windows; they seem to be selling slowly. Dahlias are arriving in considerable quantity; they are now better in quality and more salable. Golden glow is shortening up. Greens of all kinds are enough to meet the demands.

Various Notes.

F. N. Powell, Putty Hill, Md., is bringing some extra fine white hydrangeas to market and finds ready sale.

William Terry, Owings Mills, Md., has made his appearance in the Lexington market again.

A welcome home was awaiting Mrs. James Glass and family on their return from Ireland September 1.

C. Gregorius and his son have visited Philadelphia and the Jamestown exposition.

An agreement has been made between the Baltimore & Ohio railroad and Struntz Bros., of Westport. The railroad allowed them $5,000 for one-quarter of an acre of land and agreed to move their house and stable. Struntz Bros. will dig a new well and a windmill will be erected. They will have to tear down two of their greenhouses and will erect one large house in their place.

E. A. Woodfall, of Glenburnie, Md., is putting in this year about 15,000 carnation plants, and also grows callas.

H. Kaiser, of Annapolis, Md., reports business dull and looks forward to the fall trade.

The Mount Saint Agnes College, at Mount Washington, Md., is erecting a new greenhouse, 110 feet long, and will start with new stock.

Announcements are out of the marriage of Miss Ida M. Bothe to William Lehr, of Brooklyn, Md., last Wednesday. Mr. Lehr is one of the members of the firm of Lehr Bros., and is well known by the trade, having at one time been in the retail business on West Baltimore street, afterward selling out to Otto Guernth.

C. B. Hoffman, of Arlington, Md., will grow callas extensively this year.

THE MASONIC EMBLEM.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a design made by James J. Curran, at the Salem Conservatories, Salem, Va. The Masonic emblem is well brought out, especially by the fact that the green predominates, the asters standing out and showing the character of the conception better than would have been the case had the wire frame been covered solidly with flowers.

RETAIL STORE MANAGEMENT.

[A paper by F. C. W. Brown, manager of The Rosery, Toronto, Ont., read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, in convention at London, Ont., August 29, 1907.]

By "up-to-date" we must mean successful, and the success of a business is largely due to the individual.

The qualifications are so numerous that for one man to possess them all, or even a majority of them, would indeed be remarkable. Decidedly the most important qualification is executive ability, followed very closely by magnetism and an almost superhuman foresight; then in succession, to suit our opinion, temperament, control, artistic taste, appearance and fluency of speech. The first difficulty that confronts the managing head of a retail establishment is the need of confidence. If he be the owner, he must have the confidence of his assistants; if he be an employee, there is the double difficulty of gaining the confidence of his employer and of his fellow employees, and I decide to impress the fact of the absolute necessity for confidence among those who are associated together for the success of their business. Where harmony is lacking, there will be little success, for if there be discord in a business where every sense of our artistic nature must be always on the alert, the finer touches, the little spontaneous actions, which go so far to make success in the flower business, are sure to be absent, and sooner or later our ever ready competitors will annex our trade.

Confidence of Patrons.

Another great point is to gain the respectful confidence of your customers. The only way to do this is to be honest in your dealings. Let them see that you are ever ready and anxious to serve them honestly and well; teach them—do not assert—that you are more capable than they of choosing varieties and grades of flowers, and do not imagine, because your customers are wealthy, that they are anxious to squander their wealth in your establishment. Rather you should sell them a dollar's worth less than they are willing to spend, than force a dollar more and thus create in another flower buyer the impression that florists are robbers. When you do find a customer who seems to think that he is being taken advantage of, tell him, carefully and well, a few of the difficulties of procuring such flowers for him at such a season. This is where fluency of speech is necessary, but be careful not to overwork it. There are some with whom it would be better to laugh it off. Study your customer, and also remember that a fine bunch, with one, is twenty dollars' worth, and with another, fifty or seventy-five cents' worth.

Study Your Customer.

Don't suggest orchids to a carnation pocketbook, if you can help it.

Always make it a pleasure, and never appear condescending in executing any ited choice of varieties, and let you do the rest. The opportunity for increasing the value of your customers without antagonizing them, is far greater by this method than by any other I know. Also you are enabled to move the stock that is plentiful and good, instead, as is often necessary where bound by a stated kind, of giving scrubby stock of an off-crop variety. There is one disadvantage in the preceding statement, and that is, that there is sometimes a temptation to take advantage of your opportunity, and palm off poor and long-kept flowers. Don't do it, if you value your trade.

The Purchasing Department.

I now come to the section of retail management where real difficulties are faced, where the greatest uncertainty prevails, where, if there be any lying awake at night, we can always look for the cause—the purchasing department.

I feel that in beginning this section, I am, perhaps, laying myself open to se-commission for those who patronize you. Know what is required; don't overdo it.

Once more, study your customer.

If you are clever, if you have tact in gaining the confidence and respect of your trade, you can soon create the kind of trade that is both profitable to you and advantageous to them. Teach your trade that they may give you a specified limit of money, with perhaps a limvere criticism, but it would be unfair of me to pass without mentioning this most vital part in retail management.

We have here the greatest opportunity to show our fairness and honesty, but the open question is where fairness begins and ends. Let us consider a case in point. Let us say a grower has started to bring in some fine carnations. We use only fine carnations, and they are

The Market.

Business conditions are about the same as last reported. The retail business is quiet, with the exception of funeral work, which seems to have had a fairly good demand. The light shades of blooms are quickly bought up, while the darker shades hang on and many see the dump.

Carnations are failing fast and seldom produce a first-class bloom. Roses are coming in nicely, with fairly good stems. The outdoor stock is doing well. Gladioli are coming in plentifully. Hollyhocks are abundant; the white variety is mostly called for. Hydrangeas can be had in large quantities and are selling well, especially white. Asters are still coming in heavily and many of our retail stores are showing a large display in their windows; they seem to be selling slowly. Dahlias are arriving in considerable quantity; they are now better in quality and more salable. Golden glow is shortening up. Greens of all kinds are enough to meet the demands.

Various Notes.

F. N. Powell, Putty Hill, Md., is bringing some extra fine white hydrangeas to market and finds ready sale.

William Terry, Owings Mills, Md., has made his appearance in the Lexington market again.

A welcome home was awaiting Mrs. James Glass and family on their return from Ireland September 1.

C. Gregorius and his son have visited Philadelphia and the Jamestown exposition.

An agreement has been made between the Baltimore & Ohio railroad and Struntz Bros., of Westport. The railroad allowed them $5,000 for one-quarter of an acre of land and agreed to move their house and stable. Struntz Bros. will dig a new well and a windmill will be erected. They will have to tear down two of their greenhouses and will erect one large house in their place.

E. A. Woodfall, of Glenburnie, Md., is putting in this year about 15,000 carnation plants, and also grows callas.

H. Kaiser, of Annapolis, Md., reports business dull and looks forward to the fall trade.

The Mount Saint Agnes College, at Mount Washington, Md., is erecting a new greenhouse, 110 feet long, and will start with new stock.

Announcements are out of the marriage of Miss Ida M. Bothe to William Lehr, of Brooklyn, Md., last Wednesday. Mr. Lehr is one of the members of the firm of Lehr Bros., and is well known by the trade, having at one time been in the retail business on West Baltimore street, afterward selling out to Otto Guerth.

C. B. Hoffman, of Arlington, Md., will grow callas extensively this year.

We have here the greatest opportunity to show our fairness and honesty, but the open question is where fairness begins and ends. Let us consider a case in point. Let us say a grower has started to bring in some fine carnations. We use only fine carnations, and they are scarce; therefore we take all he has. A few weeks pass and the grade falls, or other growers improve, and are bringing in stock which is superior to that of our first man. We only have use for the best. We take it, and we cease to purchase from grower No. 1. In my estimation we are justified. Unfortunately, owing to a dearth of commission houses in Canada, it is sometimes a hardship on the grower to force him to look for a new market when flowers are plentiful. It is an unfortunate situation, but a decided case of survival of the fittest.

The Grower and the Retailer.

Then, again, we are in the habit of taking a majority, perhaps all, of the stock of a grower. The day dawns when we find ourselves with a surplus. The tendency is to expect the retailer to take all offered. Such being impossible, we are compelled to turn our supplyman away, with the result in many cases of his being offended. There, again, is a problem for the retail management to overcome. The solution must be left to the individual, but remember, Mr. Grower, if you force your stock when it cannot be used you might kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

In advertising a retail business—and we are strong in the belief that it pays to advertise—there are splendid opportunities to show good management as to the kind that pays best. I will leave the overzealous lady with program space in a good cause to explain to you.

Unstable and Unjust Prices.

One of the chief obstacles of the retail manager, and a subject that needs rapid and up-to-date adjustment, is the unstable and unjust prices that prevail in some varieties at the beginning of their season. Though there are others, I will mention particularly the chrysanthemum. Why we should be compelled to pay prices that range from 25 to 50 cents at the beginning of the season for stock that later would go begging at 10 cents, is more than I can understand. It is unjust and unreasonable. It is unreasonable of the grower to exact it, and unjust both to himself and to the retailer, driving away, at the very commencement of the season, many would-be customers, who, after hearing the price, gasp for breath and break for the open air, in many cases never to return. Thereby is killed a prospective buyer who would in the later season have helped consume that surplus stock that is so ruinous to the grower, in that it tumbles the price from the legitimate to the ridiculous.

Short-sighted Policy.

The claim may be advanced, "Well, we can get that price and sell all we have," but that is poor justification and shows great lack of foresight. Let me give you, Mr. Grower, the experience of fifteen years' retail business under varied conditions, and that is, that not one-half of that early stock is sold by the retailer, but it is rather consumed in design work, and if it was not for the necessity of being so-called "up-to-date," compelling us to carry that early stock, it would pay both branches of the trade, under present conditions, to keep it from sight, and use the stock in designs, until such times as sane prices should prevail. That season is fast approaching, and to me it has always caused the heaviest pangs of regret to see so many would-be purchasers turned away from our business, perhaps to return only when forced to do so by weddings or funerals.

Artistic Designing.

Another, and always important, point in retail management is the designing. In this connection it is entirely with the individual. Good taste is essential, and where there is any uncertainty in color combination, don't do it, but rather keep to the tried and accepted. In passing, it might be well to remark that many of the colors that were supposed to clash are quite acceptable. Take, for instance, pink and yellow: Enchantress and single daffodils are very beautiful under artificial light. Also pink and blue: Killarney (that wonderful rose) and pale blue ribbons form one of the most soft and artistic effects imaginable. I specify the above to show that hard and fast rules cannot be set in combination of colors in our business. The artistic taste of the retailer is tested here. Be very careful where you experiment, though.

A study of colors and values would be beneficial to all of us, as flowers differ greatly in shades according to the actinic value of the light to which they are subjected.

The foregoing are only a few of the many questions that face the management of a retail flower store.

Up-to-dateness, and success, are largely a matter of individual ability, backed by personal magnetism.

In closing let me say to you, Mr. Manager, be honorable. Study the requisites of your particular people; keep active; profit by the experience of others; always try to improve; work for the mutual good of your customers and your associates and you will benefit yourself. Then, if you have the executive ability, you are what I understand to be an up-to-date retail manager.

PEONY PLANTING.

The season for digging, dividing, shipping or replanting peonies is at hand, and in some localities the work already is well under way. As a general proposition the peony business this season has not come up to the expectations of those who were counting on a large run of orders for stock for cut flowers. There is no falling off in the demand for peonies for home planting or for landscape work. There is, indeed, an increased demand for the choicer varieties, single plants for collections, larger lots for the wealthy owners of large estates, and for considerable quantities from those who foresee a steady increase in the call for these finer sorts. The only place where the demand for peonies has fallen off is from those who were a few years ago planting them by the acre for cut flowers.

The average florist who had no peonies is planting a few this fall, for his own use. While he does not want a quantity to ship to a wholesale market, he feels the necessity for a few of the better cut flower varieties on his own place; also, he realizes that groups of the finer varieties flowered on his lawn in spring will enable him to take a large number of orders for plants of these varieties, which he may either produce himself, or buy of the wholesale grower.

Taking it all in all, this promises to be a fairly satisfactory season for the growers of peonies who have the better sorts. The common trash and mixed lots are not wanted. The only way they can be worked off is through the nursery agent. The fine varieties will never cease to be in demand.

JOLIET, ILL.—J. D. Thompson has incorporated his retail business as Thompson, Florist, the capital stock being $2,500. The incorporators are J. D. Thompson, B. C. Reber and P. W. Peterson.

PEONIES THAT SURVIVE.

A large part of the peonies in general cultivation in the United States are of French origin and in the majority of cases the ones largely grown have been on the market many years. Marie Lemoine appears to be a peony which has only recently come into its own. It was not much heard of until a few years ago, but it now is in practically every collection, thirteen of the trial lots sent to Cornell containing it. It was introduced by Calot in 1869. There is some variation in the phraseology of the growers' descriptive lists, but there is little complaint of stock not being true. H. Den Ouden & Co., Boskoop, call its color soft yellow rose. Their neighbors, Endtz, Van Nes & Co., describe it as sulphury white lightly shaded chamois. Dessert, in France, adds to the latter color description the words, "with narrow carmine edge," and supplements it by saying that the bloom, which is late, is enormous. Peterson, at Chicago, calls it a solid, massive bloom of extra size, delicate ivory white, very late. C. W. Ward says it is a magnificent variety and very scarce.

Mme. Crousse is an old and widely known variety, originated in France, by Calot, and first offered, as far as records go, in 1866. W. A. Peterson, Chicago, considers it one of the best. He describes it as pure white, but sometimes with slight crimson markings in the center, and comments on its fragrance. A. Dessert, the widely known French peony grower, describes it thus: "Large bloom, pure white, center edged with bright carmine, fine bud, strong stems, one of the best white varieties for cut flowers." It is widely grown, the variety being in nine of the collections sent to Cornell for trial.

Jeanne d'Arc is another old variety credited to Calot in 1858. Nine growers included it in collections sent to Cornell. Den Ouden & Co. describe it as flesh color, white and rose center. Endtz, Van Nes & Co., who put it in a list of choice varieties, say it is a large, soft pink flower, sulphur white and lively rose, center spotted carmine, to which Dessert adds that it is a "very fresh color."

Boule de Neige is a Calot variety of 1862. Only four growers sent it to Cornell. Dessert calls it a large cup-shaped bloom of perfect shape, with brightly sulphured center, bordered with bright carmine; habit erect. It is listed with practically identical descriptions by most of the European growers, but American growers do not carry large stocks of it.

Mme. de Verneville is a comparatively recent variety, being listed as distributed by Crousse in 1885. It is in six of the trial lots at Cornell. Peterson describes it as pure white with red flakes in center, large guard petals, early, free, fragrant and very delicate. H. Den Ouden & Co. call it yellow, white, buffish.

Peony Mrs. Willock.

Peony Jeanne d'Arc.

Endtz, Van Nes & Co. say it is a fine anemone-shaped flower, broad guard petals, center very compact, sulphury flesh white, which are almost the words of Dessert, who adds that it is a very early bloom.

Peony M. Jules Elie is a Crousse variety of 1888. There are seven trial collections at Cornell which contain it. Peterson describes this as a massive pink, clear flesh color, large and free bloomer. Den Ouden & Co., in Holland, call it fine rose, sulphur tinted. Dessert gives it a lengthy description, as follows: Very large, full globular flower, color of the finest glossy flesh pink, deepening at the base of the petals, reflex silvery pink, quite fragrant, flower of a nice form and very beautiful.

Peony Mrs. Willock is one which is little known. It is listed at Cornell, but none of the test collections contains it, nor does it appear in the catalogues of leading growers, either in this country or France. Several of the Holland growers have it and in nearly every case their description is copied verbatim from the catalogue of Kelway & Son, the English firm with which the variety originated, only a few years ago. They describe it as "rosy lilac guard petals, with narrow yellowish petaloids in center." The illustration will serve to show the form of the flower.

The illustration of Peony Thryne is from a photograph sent, with several, by Endtz, Van Nes & Co., Boskoop, Holland, and may be of value as an example of how easily peony nomenclature may be mixed. No such name is recorded in the Cornell check list, nor do Endtz, Van Nes & Co. themselves list it in their catalogue. It is possible the name is an error. Does anyone recognize it?

UP-TO-DATE METHODS.

[A paper by T. W. Duggan, of Brampton, Ont., read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, in convention at London, Ont., August 28, 1907.]

I have no recipe for making florists rich quickly, nor have I anything new to tell you. My only excuse for attempting a paper of this kind is my inability to refuse the request of our indefatigable secretary, with whom I wrestled for a period and then became a victim, hoping that Blucher, or night, or anything might come to help me out.

I do not know that many of the facts stated, or suggestions offered, will apply to all classes of florists, or greenhouses. I have not had the experience of very small beginnings, and, indeed, as you well know, am not a florist by training, but have had to do principally with the management of a large grower's trade.

I trust I may be pardoned for making references to myself, for I have no desire to obtrude my personality, or for referring to the Dale estate, which is too big and prosperous to need advertising in this manner, but it will be impossible for me to contribute a paper on this subject without referring to our business and its management.

In the time allotted I cannot hope to refer to many items that should be governed by everyday common sense, but in passing may say that no detail is too small to have our very best attention. In everything that is done, one's very best efforts should be put forth, and no looseness allowed in any direction. Preachers divide their subjects into several headings, and while I am not much of a parson, I shall take the liberty of suggesting three main thoughts: First, character; second, capacity; third, cash—in importance in the order in which they are given.

Character—Its Effect on Employees.

Nothing in this world exceeds character. It permeates every part of life. The work of employees and the confidence of customers will be affected by the character of the management. We must give our co-workers every consideration, to be able to get out of them the best possible, and we must treat them in a spirit that will cause them to feel that they belong to the business and are recognized, not as machines, but as integral parts of the firm. Probably nothing touches a man more quickly than the pocket, and I think that our growers, and other assistants who merit it, ought to be paid every dollar that the profits of the business will afford. It is our custom to revise the wages of the whole staff at the end of every business year, which with us is June 30, and give such increases as the merits of the men might reasonably call for, taking into consideration the annual profits. I believe that when men realize that their actions are being scrutinized, not for the advantage of the employer only, but also to give opportunity of reimbursing them, our men will work with a zest and consequent success that cannot otherwise be obtained.

Since I took the management of the Dale estate, seven years ago, the wages of our men have been materially increased, the increase running from twenty-five to fifty per cent, and I do not know that we have arrived at high-water mark yet. In connection with our business I have honestly endeavored to consider the financial obligation to them even more than my own, so much so that while the above percentage of increase has been made since Mr. Dale's death, the executors have not asked for, nor received, any increased allowance, although the burden has been very much heavier, and the business five times as great as when we first took charge.

Peony Mme. Crousse.

Peony Boule de Neige.

Employees Not Mere Hirelings.

Men, however, are not influenced by money considerations alone, and I have felt it desirable to treat them, not as hirelings, but as associates, as good as I am in every respect, and make them feel in every possible way that they are necessary parts of our successful business, and to the visitor and public generally bring them forward as deserving of notice and praise. Out of business, too, I think they ought to be recognized as equals, which they are, and I believe it is possible to do all this and still have all the respect that is due to the management. Although we have a staff of about 120 men, more than half of them growers, we have remarkably few changes, and have not in seven years lost more than two or three men that we would have cared to retain.

In connection with the new office and shipping room building recently erected we have made provision for a reading room, and adjoining bath-room, etc., and provide magazines and daily papers, where our men can while away the time during the noon hour, or before or after work, and while all has not been done that we would like to do, and that may yet be done, we have honestly endeavored to show our men that we think of them in every respect, and in this way we retain their confidence and get from them, in most cases we believe, the best that they can give us.

Character Its Effect on Patrons.

Allow me to turn away in the relation of character from ourselves to our patrons. In this respect I was glad to follow in the footsteps of the founder of the business, Harry Dale, than whom, I believe, a more honest grower never lived. His ideal was a high grading, and a stick-to-it under all circumstances, and it is well known to the trade that we have followed this out in every respect. The customer ought to know what he may expect when he gives an order, and neither scarcity of stock, nor any other contingency, is an excuse for departing from the proper line of conduct.

Our staff—specially set apart for grading the stock after it is cut, and before it is put in the cellar—have positive instructions about the grading of stock as brought in from the growers. Then, again, the shipper and his assistants are warned in their reselection prior to packing, that each individual flower as handled must be inspected and set aside, no matter how great the hurry, or how scarce stock is, if it is not up to the proper standard.

We believe it is very short-sighted policy for the grower to attempt to substitute a lower grade for a higher grade under any circumstances. It might pass by unnoticed, or, being noticed, without comment by the consignee, but it is a suicidal policy that will injure the business. It will not do to get the confidence of your customer, and think you have him, and then take advantage of his trust. Every consignment ought to consist of stock selected and packed as if his business were dependent upon the result of that shipment, and once your customer believes that he can depend implicitly upon the character of the grower, his business is not likely to go elsewhere. I might say, in passing, that so far as my memory serves me we have not lost more than one customer during these seven years, and have gained very many new ones, largely, we believe, because of the reputation of the firm for square dealing.

Capacity.

As to the second item, capacity, I do not pretend to be able to give the members of this association any pointers on how to grow stock. That is not the purpose of this paper, nor have I the ability to contribute anything in that direction if it were desired. There must, however, in any medium sized business at least, be some capacity for management, as well as for growing. The late Harry Dale, who was a king among rose growers, and a very clever mechanic as well, had sense enough to recognize his deficiency in this respect. I remember very well his sending for me and telling me honestly that while he could grow roses, do steam fitting and other mechanical work, he felt that the business must have some better management than he could give to it, and asked me to join him and take charge of this part of the business. The results speak for themselves. A doubling up of this nature, or even a partnership, may not in many instances be either wise or desirable, even to get the benefit of business training, but there ought to be, on the part of the grower, a study of up-to-date business methods as followed in the building up of other concerns, and a certain portion of time given to that phase of the situation. Where possible, one of the family ought to be trained for business, as well as for growing stock, and in this way be able to give assistance as the older heads become incapacitated.

Choice of Location.

My five years with Harry Dale, and subsequent seven years, have taught me that growers have something else to think of besides producing their wares. In beginning a business, there must be first the consideration of situation. I believe that no business of this nature can be established very distant from a large city with very much hope of attaining any great size, partly because of the benefit of the adjoining city trade, but principally because of good railway facilities, which are vital to building up any large greenhouse trade. While Brampton is not a large town, it is practically in the suburbs of Toronto, having the immediate benefit of all the railways centering in that city. A smaller business may, of course, be made up as an adjunct to any town in the Dominion, and the business would likely be proportionate to the size of the town, but I believe every such business must be owned and have the personal conduct of the proprietor.

I do not believe any small or medium sized business, say under 50,000 feet of glass, can be managed and made profitable by a company, with directors, manager, and other officers to be paid out of the dividends.

There can be no question about the desirability of possessing the most modern buildings, with the best class of construction, very best quality of glass, framework kept well painted, and greenhouses kept scrupulously clean. It is a positive hindrance to the trade and to our business success, and is in my opinion altogether inexcusable, to allow greenhouses to get into the condition in which many are found through lack of proper care.

It is Wise to Specialize.

So far we have not thought it wise to mix the trade of plants with cut flowers, ours, as is well known, being a cut flower trade exclusively. I think that it is wise to specialize, unless the business can be made so enormous as to specialize in many different departments. That point has not yet been reached in the trade in Canada.

In connection with our business, which is wholesale exclusively, we have not thought it wise to have a retail store. When I joined the late Harry Dale he had a retail store on Yonge street, Toronto, and I came to the conclusion that it was hardly fair to the trade, either there or elsewhere, to depart even to this extent from our wholesale feature, and on my solicitation the store was closed. Mr. Dale lived to indorse my view as being absolutely correct, and I have not yet changed my opinion. Furthermore, we have lived up to our professions of selling to the trade only, and not to the public, with this exception, and at rare intervals, that where a demand for our flowers comes from a locality far distant from any place where our goods are handled by the trade, and there has not been time to direct service elsewhere, rather than disappoint we have filled the order. This trade is discouraged, however, is not desired, and never given heed to, except where a refusal would carry unnecessary disappointment. The public, however, cannot in any instance obtain goods from us direct in any town or city where our goods are handled by the trade, and we believe that growers cannot be too particular in this respect. It is a duty to our customers that will pay, as well as make us feel that we are living up to our professions.

mences you must use only the liquid extracts, which will not injure the blooms. Fumigating is not desirable at this time, because you should not have the ventilators down tight any length of time, even at night.

Aphides will not appear for some time yet, but if you spray to keep down thrips the aphides will not bother you, as they succumb easier than the thrips. Red spider will not likely appear until hard firing begins, so you can reduce your syringing to a couple of times each week, or less if any of the leaf-spots appear. Keep the soil in good, open condition and give all the air you can both day and night. A. F. J. BAUR.

STEM-ROT.

Will you please tell me the cause and remedy of young carnation plants, planted from two to four weeks, simply withering up and dying? Upon examining the plants I find the bark of the stem rotted, decayed and falling off. Not many are affected so far, possibly two per cent, but this loss is giving me much worry. I did not notice this trouble in the field and the plants are exceptionally fine, thrifty stock. I have followed directions given in the REVIEW as to spraying, watering, ventilating, etc. The varieties are Enchantress, White Perfection, three varieties of the Lawson, Craig and Boston Market. The plants have all taken hold of the new soil and are making fine growth. Ninety per cent of the loss is among the Enchantress. I had a light lime shade on the glass, which is now practically all off. The plants suffered little from wilting, as we had cool weather at time of housing. E. H. O.

Your plants are dying off with the common form of stem-rot. This is one of the worst enemies we have to deal with, because not only is it destructive to the plants, but it is difficult to combat. Its operations are confined to the stem of the plant and it is difficult to reach the stems with any remedy you may apply. After you once notice the plant begin to wilt, it is too late to do anything to save it, as it is too far gone by that time.

This is a fungous disease, which remains practically inactive when kept dry and which delights in a warm, humid atmosphere. That is why you find it so troublesome right after housing the plants. The frequent syringing and the greater heat of the house cause it to spring into activity. Planting too deeply will also bring it on.

Stir the soil and dust the plants well with slaked lime and sulphur mixed in equal portions, and sprinkle the soil as well with it. Grape dust is also good. These will dry up and kill the fungus wherever they reach it. Run the soil a little on the dry side, too, and give all the ventilation possible. A. F. J. BAUR.

FAIRY-RING.

Enclosed are some leaves of carnations. Most of our carnations are turning this way. Please let us know the cause and what to do for it. The new shoots have leaves that are turning the same way. We are beginners on this line and do not know the cause of the trouble. We are picking off all the leaves this way now, but would like to know what else to do. L. & B.

The spots on the leaves of your carnations are caused by fairy-ring and that

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Seasonable Culture.

Before you begin supporting your plants is the proper time to do whatever cleaning off of dead leaves needs to be done. You can get at the plants better and more and better work can be done. This is an operation which requires great care to prevent injury to the plants, and unless you can do it carefully it had better be left undone. We had splendid weather this summer and our plants have few dead leaves, so that little cleansing is necessary.

The best time to do this is when the plants are quite dry. Then the leaves will break off readily, while if they are damp they are apt to pull a string of the bark from the stem, causing injury to the plant. Be sure you remove the dead leaves entirely from the house, as they are apt to have on them the spores of any of the leaf-spot diseases and to allow them to lie on the damp soil is to start them into activity.

After cleaning off the plants, dust them with grape-dust or any such preparation and stir the soil again before putting on the supports.

Perhaps in going along you will notice some of the lower leaves partly eaten off along the edges. This is being done by the pests known as wood-lice, sow-bugs or shot-bugs. You will find them mostly along the edge of the beds and they are easily reached by distributing bait along the edge-board. Use sugar and Paris green, or the remedy recommended for cut-worms in the REVIEW a few weeks ago. Do not expect one dose to kill them all, but repeat at the end of a week, and even a third time if deemed necessary.

If the red and pink varieties are coming with white spots on the petals it is a sure sign that thrips are present and you must get right after them. There will be few blooms of value for a few weeks yet, and you can use tobacco dust to good advantage. After blooming comis brought on by the same conditions that bring on all the leaf-spots and kindred diseases. Too much rain or a hot spell right after a heavy rain is most frequently the cause. Sometimes it does not appear until the plants are benched, in which case it is caused by too much heat and too much syringing. Picking off the affected leaves is the proper thing to do, and after you have them picked clean dust the plants with grape-dust or with lime and sulphur mixed in equal proportions. Bordeaux mixture is also one of the best remedies. Stop syringing just as soon as practical and water only at the roots until you have the disease checked. A little fire heat on cool nights with the ventilators open and a pipe painted with sulphur and lime will be found a great help.

EXTERMINATING SNAILS.

My greenhouses are full of snails, from two to four inches long. They live in solid beds and at night come out to feed. What shall I do to get rid of them?

A. V. B.

Snails, if in such numbers as you mention, will do much damage to any plants for which they have a liking. Air-slaked lime dusted over the surface of the soil will kill all which crawl over it. Scatter it on the beds the last thing in the evening, when the surface is moderately dry. It is of little value when damp. Many can be trapped by laying lettuce and cabbage leaves at intervals over the beds and searching these at intervals.

If you have a bad plague of these pests and heroic measures are necessary, purchase a bottle of carbon bisulphide, with a pointed stick make holes at intervals of twelve to twenty-four inches apart each way, and allow a few drops of the liquid to go in each hole, covering it up immediately. Go over your beds in this way and you will clean out not only snails but any other pests in the soil.

Carbon bisulphide is poisonous and is explosive, so do not light any matches while using it or results may be disastrous to yourself. It is best used when the soil is quite damp, the fumes then penetrating farther. It will not injure the plants in the least. If you have the facilities, sterilize your soil before planting the houses for another season. It will not only help you keep clear of snails, but will free your soil of all weed and fungous growths, and insects, and will cost you little.

SEASONABLE CULTURE.

The days are rapidly getting shorter and the summer sun is decreasing in power. This, with the heavy growth now on the benches, means that much less syringing is necessary than was the case a month ago. Excepting on clear, bright days the plants should not be sprayed at all, and they should never be sprayed so late in the day that they are not perfectly dry by nightfall.

Just now is when the different forms of leaf-spot (Septoria), rust and kindred diseases get their foothold if the plants are indiscriminately watered and syringed. The beds will not dry out as evenly as they did, because the sun cannot penetrate to the center of the bench, and it will often be found that the benches need water along the sides when the middle is moist enough.

As the stem begins to "bark up," that is to say, as it ripens, the bottom leaves of the plant will gradually turn yellow and decay. This is in no sense of the word a disease, but merely a natural process by which, as the stem gets hard, the supply of nourishment to these leaves is gradually withheld. They can be removed and the plants will be better without them, as it gives the soil a better chance to dry out.

The earliest varieties are showing color and, as they develop, the feeding should be discontinued. It is generally necessary to shade the earliest flowers and this should be done without shading the crop generally, because just at present the main crop is in need of all the sun possible to ripen the growth.

All buds should be taken now as they appear. There is no longer any question of early or late crowns. Any bud in sight is safe to take and it is wonderful at this time how quickly they show up. Plants should be gone over every day, in the early morning, and all buds taken that show. After the cool night, the superfluous shoots and buds break out much more quickly than they do in the middle of the day, when the sun toughens up the growth again.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

TAKING THE BUD.

What is meant by the following expressions used in catalogues in connection with the culture of mums: "Take the bud August 25 to September 1," "second crown bud," "use early crown"?

W. N. T.

By saying, "Take the bud August 25 to September 1," we mean that it is perfectly safe to take the first bud that shows after August 25, while buds taken before that date will not give flowers of such good quality. I would rather give a date that way, as it is so much simpler than to say, "Take a first or second crown bud." The terms "first crown," "second crown," etc., are misleading, because early rooted stock will produce a first crown bud in May, a time when most commercial growers are only just propagating their stock. Plants rooted in February and grown right along will often produce four or five buds before one comes late enough to be taken, and in such cases the term "first or second crown" is useless. The term comes to us from England, where the growers time their blooms, and that, too, with wonderful regularity. Here conditions are very different climatically and the same method of culture cannot be followed with any degree of success.

By giving a date after which it is safe to take buds, one not thoroughly at home in mums is relieved of a lot of worry, and crowns and terminals need not enter into his calculations at all.

I presume W. N. T. is aware that when we say "taking a bud" we literally mean leaving it, rubbing off the side shoots or buds and retaining the central bud; that is what is meant by taking buds.

C. H. T.

NIGHT SOIL.

We think of using some night soil on our mums and would like to have some pointers on how much to use to a barrel of water for applying in a liquid state. Would a pail of night soil to a barrel of water be too strong?

J. A. K.

Night soil may be used on chrysanthemums and other stock, but in its raw state it is decidedly objectionable. The odor, which is not exactly that of "Araby the blest," will hang around the place for weeks, and this one fact prevents its use in any establishment having any pretensions to being sanitary or progressive. There is a preparation on the market called Clay's fertilizer, which, it is claimed, is sewage matter, dried and pulverized, and which gives splendid results. Far better use this than become "a stench in the nostrils of men."

The chief element of virtue in night soil is, of course, the nitrogen. This can be obtained from sulphate of ammonia, nitrate of potash, nitrate of soda, or from the excrement of cows or sheep, in a far more cleanly manner, and so far as I can see is equally beneficial. To any reader intending to feed with night soil I would say, Don't!

COLEUS FOR STOCK.

The practice of putting aside a few old coleus plants for the provision of cuttings in spring is a general one, but, like a good many common practices, not incapable of improvement. These old plants are often none too clean, mealy bug and scale being in many cases firmly established on them. This is bad for the plants themselves, and their ultimate progeny, and bad, too, for other plants occupying the same structure. How much better is it to select a few healthy cuttings now, and throw away the old plants. These cuttings root with the greatest facility, and, if pinched when struck, will give far better and cleaner material for wintering than the old staggers. By removing the tops of these youngsters in spring, not only are nice young cuttings provided, but the framework of a good specimen is laid at the same time, says a European gardeners' magazine.

THE HUMFELD QUARTETTE.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of four of the Humfeld brothers, all in the florists' business. Henry M. Humfeld, beginning at the right of the picture, has a business located in Frankfort, Ind. He has 11,000 feet of glass devoted to cut flowers and plants. He located there eleven years ago and is the leading florist in that place. The next one to him is Simon Humfeld, of Muncie, Ind. He has about 23,000 feet of glass and grows cut flowers and plants for bedding. He located at Muncie about eighteen years ago, when natural gas was abundant. He has been successful in his undertaking and is now the leader in the business in that city. The next brother is Ed A. Humfeld, who has a business at Sixth and Paseo streets, Kansas City. He has about 10,000 feet of glass, growing cut flowers and plants. He grows a great many plants for Electric park. He has charge of all plants and lawns at that park.

To the left of the picture is W. H. Humfeld, of the W. H. Humfeld Floral Co., whose place of business is at Ninth and Highland avenue, Kansas City. He has about 23,000 feet of glass and grows cut flowers and plants. He has been in this place fifteen years. He has the reputation of filling more porch boxes than any other florist in that city.

There is one more brother in the business, at Clay Center, Kan., who does not appear in this group. This brother is Charles Humfeld, the verbenas king. His face is well known by his advertising in the REVIEW. He has about 30,000 feet of glass, devoted mostly to rooted cuttings. He started in business there about seventeen years ago and his business has grown to such an extent that this spring he could not any way near fill his orders, which came from all over the United States.

Azaleas.

It will be a few weeks yet before the new Belgian importations of azaleas come to hand, but you may have some left-over plants from last season, which have been planted outside and which can now be lifted and potted at any time. Azaleas like a compost of leaf-mold, sand and peat, but will do well in loam instead of peat. It is better not to use any manure when potting. The roots of these hard-wooded plants are numerous, but fine and hair-like. Prick away as much loose soil as you can with a pointed stick, in order to get them in pots of moderate size. Be sure to pot firmly. Use a pointed stick rammer and, after placing the ball in the center of the pot, shake some of the compost around the sides, give the pot a thump on the potting bench to settle it down; then use the rammer. Continue this proceeding until the soil is packed firmly all around the sides of the pots. All hard-wooded plants need this care in potting; it is not sufficient to scatter a little compost around the ball, press in with the fingers and thumb, give the pot a shake and call to the boy for the next.

Azaleas, after being potted, may be stood in the open air for a time, or placed in a cold house. If kept syringed for a few days they will quickly recover from their temporary check and start rooting. Kept-over plants usually force more readily than the freshly imported ones.

Adiantums.

An indispensable adjunct to every establishment doing any retail trade is a good batch of maidenhair ferns. The fronds are always in request; even the customer who comes to you for a quarter's worth of flowers will expect it to be liberally sprinkled with adiantum fronds. We hope you have looked after your plants well during the summer, in which case they will be well furnished with quantities of rich, dark fronds. Continue to keep them well shaded. Adiantums grown in light houses have tougher foliage, maybe, but it is pale in color as compared with those produced under more shade. The dark green brand always sells the best.

Adiantums, if well potbound, appre-

SEASONABLESUGGESTIONS*Marguerites.

During the summer months marguerites persist in throwing flower buds on every shoot and it is difficult to secure suitable cuttings for propagating purposes. Now, with the cooler nights and heavier night dews, the plants are growing rapidly and it is possible to secure a good quantity of excellent cuttings. Marguerites are among the most popular of market pot plants and the cut flowers meet with an increasing sale each year, being disposed of without trouble when roses and carnations are quite druggy. From cuttings taken now, fine plants for spring sales can be grown. Both the white and yellow forms sell well as cut flowers, perhaps the latter having the best call.

There are several varieties of marguerites in commerce, the most recent acquisition being the beautiful Queen Alexandra. Young plants of this do not bloom so early as the other varieties and where they are wanted in bloom for the Christmas holidays it is better to propagate late in the spring and pot on as needed, pinching out all flower buds as they appear. Fine stock may be had of any of the marguerites by adopting this plan. It is in the spring, however, that the demand for marguerites is best. Both at Easter and Memorial day they are good sellers, either in pots or cut. Give any old plants you may have a light, sunny house and give them a shift into their blooming pots now. If the cuttings put in are well watered and shaded, they will be fit to pot off in three weeks and should be potted off as soon as the roots are an inch long. Grow them cool, airy and sunny and they will grow surprisingly fast.

A Quartette of Humfeld Brothers.

ciate some feeding. Alternate doses of weak cow manure and soot water are safer than chemicals. Once a week is often enough to feed.

Plants in rather small pots, if badly potbound, may still be given a shift. Scratch the ball with a sharp stick and drain the pots well.

Adiantum cuneatum is still more grown than all other varieties combined. It remains the best all-round kind for the average florist to handle. It succeeds well in any house where a night temperature of 55 degrees to 60 degrees in winter is kept. Adiantum Farleyense prefers a warmer house. It is mostly in the hands of specialists, who give it the attention and conditions which are impossible to the every-day florist. Where a house can be devoted to this fern, with the necessary heat, it is not difficult to grow. The fronds are always in request for choice decorations or funeral work.

Nephrolepis.

No ferns sell like the nephrolepis. It is not many years since the Boston fern, Nephrolepis exaltata Bostoniensis, was practically the only sort grown. Since then we had successively Pieroni, Barrowsii, Scottii, Elegantissima, Whitmani and several others whose stars were quickly set, and we are promised a flood of additional sports in addition to Todea-oides and Amerpohlii, which are both beautiful. In spite of the accession of new varieties, the old Boston fern still meets with a big sale. Scottii is popular with many. Elegantissima has many admirers and Whitmani is popular with everyone who has grown it.

Now is the time to dig up and place in pots or pans a good batch of the plants you have had growing in the benches during summer. If carefully lifted, they will sustain little check and will be well established before Thanksgiving, by which date there will be considerable demand for ferns of this class. Give the plants a close, moist house until well established, then move them to cooler and airier conditions. Be careful in watering the heavily fronded varieties not to wet them, as careless use of the hose will soon raise havoc with this class of ferns. They do not require heavy shade, like adiantums.

Small Ferns.

There is always a good call for small ferns, especially those suitable for filling fern dishes. Few florists raise their own stock of these, preferring to buy what they need each fall from specialists handling big quantities. The present is a good time to place orders for whatever may be needed in this line, in order that they may be delivered while the weather is warm. Give them a bench in a north house for a while and keep them well shaded. As the weather grows cooler, place them where they can get a minimum temperature of 55 degrees. Look out for snails and lay traps for any which may trouble the adiantums. Dusting among the pots with air-slaked lime is sometimes necessary. A good plan is to move the pots from the bench and give it a soaking with boiling water. This will clean out the snail family effectually.

Brief Reminders.

Give early Lilium Harrisii wanted, for Christmas a bench where a temperature of 60 degrees is maintained. Be careful not to overwater. Better keep a little on the dry side.

Keep the soil well stirred among biennials and perennials recently transplanted. The heavy fall rains bake the ground hard and plants will not grow satisfactorily under such conditions.

Finish the transplanting of evergreens by the middle of September. It is too early yet to move deciduous trees and shrubs.

Use care in watering primulas, especially of the Chinese type. Scratch the surface of the pots. Use the watering pot instead of the hose for this section.

Pinch gardenias and keep them well sprayed to free them from mealy bug.

Reduce the amount of shading on the houses. Outside of palms, ferns and some other foliage subjects, the majority of plants will now need full sunlight.

Take advantage of wet days to wash down glass and woodwork. All possible light will be needed before long.

Do not crowd your nephrolepis specimens. Give them room to show their symmetry. Elevate the largest plants, or hang them from the roof. Be sure to give them plenty of water.

Give your early batch of Roman hyacinths and Paper Whites another soaking. They dry out fast at this season, even in a cellar.

Do not allow mildew to get a foothold on roses. Fire heat will now be a necessity on damp days.

Sponge palms and other decorative plants when time permits.

Have you an ample supply of bulb pans, flower pots and flats for fall use? If not, get in a stock without delay.

THE SEASON'S START.

Here is a partially rainy day, for which we feel duly thankful, having had so little rain this summer. And as I sit down to my writing it comes to me that it is again September; the convention, with its pleasures, inspirations, etc., is a thing of the past and we are again at the threshold of the growers' fall season. It will be but a short time ere we find ourselves hard at the old tasks that the past warm weather has freed us from—picking, bunching, packing, shipping, cleaning, watering, airing, firing and all the many details that go to the care of a season's crop.

Particular care should be taken from this time on that the plants have all the light possible. If you did not grow your plants in the house, but have lifted them and brought them in, see to it that the shading is entirely removed as soon as they have taken hold. And give them all the air possible, keeping them in a thrifty, growing condition. Under no circumstances let them make a soft, quick growth, but by all the light and air possible, and by judicious watering, maintain a stiff, stocky, hardy, healthy clump.

As I have often remarked, the time when you must begin to pick must necessarily determine how long you will continue to pick off the buds now forming.

It is well to keep them off for some time, thereby strengthening your plant, unless you especially desire the early blooms and have the market for them.

The growing of violets in any quantity is at the best very tedious and monotonous work, and the only way to have it profitable or satisfactory is by all the time keeping ahead of your work and, by so doing, reducing the work to a minimum and keeping the standard up to the maximum. In order to accomplish this desired end, everything must be taken by the forelock. Not a single aphid of any kind should be allowed to appear; no snails, sow bugs, centipeds or any other variety of live stock, either new or old; not a dead leaf or a runner; no sodden soil or anything tending toward an imperfectly kept house.

Of course you attended long ago to the heating apparatus and know that this is in perfect order for the winter, so that later, when it may be necessary to start a little heat, all that you will have to do will be to lay your fire and touch the match to it. It is a great relief to a grower of any kind of plants, at this season of the year, to feel that everything is in readiness for a hard winter's firing, including a full coal bin, so that a winter strike of the miners has no terrors for him.

TROUBLE WITH GERANIUMS

We send some sample branches of geraniums. You will see that they are full of disease and we would like to know what it is; also how to clean the plants. These are plants growing in the open air for propagating on next season.

S. & N.

The shoots and leaves received were badly diseased and should not on any account be used for propagating purposes. The plants are evidently starved and stunted, if the shoots sent are typical ones. It is difficult to tell what has caused the trouble. If your stock was planted out late, was badly potbound and perhaps dry at the root when put in the ground, it would fall an easy prey to disease. Climatic influences often cause blighting of the foliage, damp, muggy weather without sunshine being specially favorable to its spread.

I would suggest the purchasing of some clean stock. Nothing but disappointment can follow propagating from your own plants, if they are all like the samples seen. Plant out your stock in an open, sunny spot next season, and do not depend on the left-overs from your season's sales. Set out good plants early in June and we see no reason why you should not have clean, thrifty cuttings next fall.

METHOD OF APPLYING MANURE.

In a recent article on "Hen Manure and Its Value" you advise sowing it broadcast after being screened and mixed with dry soil. Now, do you plow it under or sow it after the ground is planted?

I have supposed that the best plan for using it in the hill was to mix it with soil and rot it thoroughly before using. I have also been told that a good way to do is to sow it broadcast in the fall and plow under. Would be glad to have your opinion.

L. M. G.

To insure proper decomposition of manure, both air and moisture are necessary, while extreme dryness or too much water will arrest it.

Making a compost of one-fourth chicken manure and three-fourths good loam and keeping it under cover, turning it over at intervals to allow access of air, until ready to use it, would be in accordance with the principles as laid down by Dr. Voelker and Messrs. Laws and Gilbert, experts in this class of work.

By sowing it in the fall, either broadcast or in hills or drills, and plowing it under, there would be no loss of its most valuable constituents, nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash, which by this process would be in an assimilable form by spring. RIBES.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Flint Kennicott.

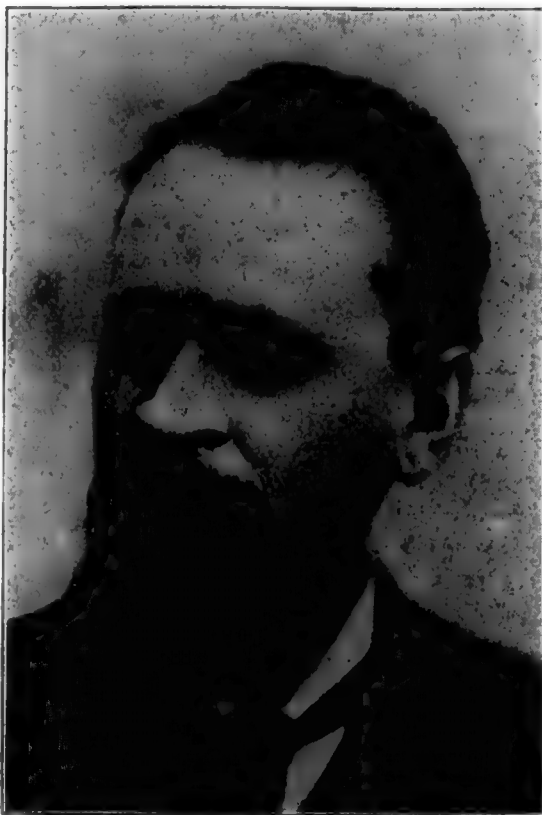

Flint Kennicott died as he had lived a good share of his life—in the market. It was at about 11:30 Monday morning, September 9, that he was mounting the steps from the barber shop in the basement at 22 Randolph street when he was overcome and sank to the sidewalk. An ambulance was summoned and he remained unconscious sufficiently to ask to be taken to his firm's store, at 48 Wabash, but by the time he had reached there he was again fainting and was carried to St. Luke's hospital, where he breathed his last in a few moments. An inquest was held and the cause of death decided to be an organic disease of the heart.

Mr. Kennicott was president of the Kennicott Bros. Co. and the dean of the wholesalers in the Chicago cut flower market. He was the first man to rely for a livelihood wholly upon wholesaling cut flowers on a commission basis, and had been actively and continuously engaged in the business longer than any other man in the market. To his foresight and enterprise, as much as to any other factor, was due the early development of the Chicago wholesale market—and in his later years he kept in step with its progress, though health had been failing for some time and his activity was much lessened by his implacable foe, rheumatism.

Mr. Kennicott was the youngest son of the late Dr. John A. Kennicott, a pioneer settler of Illinois. He was born fifty-nine years ago, at the family home at The Grove, near DesPlaines, Ill. In his youth he followed the profession of an actor, and old-timers remember him well as playing "The Two Orphans," with Katie Putnam, in which the two made a great success, appearing all over the United States. Mr. Kennicott's oldest brother, Amaza, who died at The Grove April 7, 1907, was probably the pioneer in the growing of outdoor flowers for the Chicago market. He had been engaged in this for so many years that at the date of his death the exact date of the first sales had been lost. About 1880 he induced his brother, Flint, to join him in opening a retail flower store on Wabash avenue. A little later, appreciating the opportunities which lay before a wholesale flower store in Chicago, they started wholesaling at 27 Washington street, in a basement where the Marshall Field building now stands. Amaza Kennicott withdrew after a time, but Flint continued to give his whole time and attention to the business from that day. The vicissitudes were many, but the record of the house was kept without blemish and since its incorporation, about ten years ago, it has had the smoothest of sailing, with Mr. Kennicott as president, G. H. Pieser as secretary and E. E. Pieser as treasurer. Mr. Kennicott, of course, through his many years of connection with the trade, had a wide circle of acquaintances and it was always a pleasure to have him tell of the days when the flower business was in embryo. His memory of men and events was of the clearest in spite of his failing physical powers. He had the confidence and respect of all who knew him either personally or by reputation, for his acts always were in accord with justice and his judgments tempered by consideration for others. He leaves a widow, two unmarried daughters and a son.

The funeral was held at Graceland chapel at 1 o'clock on the afternoon of Flint Kennicott.

September 11, a large number being present and the floral display elaborate. The Chicago Florists' Club, of which Mr. Kennicott was an old member, attended in a body, as a mark of respect all the wholesale cut flower houses in the Chicago market closing during the hour in which the funeral services were held. Interment was at Arlington Heights, beside the body of his brother and partner, Amaza, who had preceded him to this last resting place by only five months. Mr. Kennicott had not had a photograph taken in many years. The one appearing herewith was printed in the initial number of the REVIEW, December 2, 1897, and is his latest portrait.

THE FUTURE OF THE DAHLIA.

The dahlia, so long a favorite flower with many florists, has certainly attained a popularity undreamed of by those who first undertook the culture of the dahlia. The question of its future will doubtless also engage the closest attention of the specialists who champion the cause of this most showy group of plants.

Already in some quarters we perceive signs of a strong movement against the present race of cactus dahlias, a movement which is antagonistic to formal types and conventional designs. This new tendency will sooner or later challenge the very existence of the stiff, formal type of cactus dahlias, and varieties which are at present regarded as representative of the best of the exhibition type, will be disregarded. Although cactus dahlias are largely used, often as cut flowers for large vases, yet the arrival of a better type for decorative purposes will rapidly displace them from their position.

The single dahlias, some of which are most refined in appearance and dainty in coloring, are still a specialty with a few leading growers. New varieties are quietly being added to the group year by year, and when the tide turns in favor of this useful type many will be surprised at the beauty and charm of the varieties which have been added of late. That the tide will turn strongly in their favor there is no doubt, for as the popular fancy tires of the stiff, pointed glories of the cactus group, they will be impelled to return to the graceful simplicity of the singles. And what a useful section they are, valuable for cutting, light in formation, and easy to arrange, as they possess long, stiff stems, and go well with their own foliage, or branching sprays of late summer and autumn leaves.

But one may, perhaps, be pardoned for stating that with the new peony-flowered section lies, to a large extent, the future of the dahlia. But such a statement will be realized sooner or later, for even at this time they are filling a large part of the dahlia talk, both in England and on the continent. In them we see the results of the ebbing tide of formality, stereotyped design, regularity of petal. The newcomers, with their pleasing, loosely arranged petals, irregularity of form, and their absolute disregard of the conventional florists' types, to which may be added the natural beauty of the golden centers, will assuredly come to the front.—P. S. Hayward in the Gardeners' Magazine.

CONNECTED HOUSES.

[A paper by George Robinson, of Outremont, Que., read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, in convention at London, Ont., August 29, 1907.]

The first consideration in constructing, maintaining and running a commercial establishment is economy, and the connected house style is certainly to be recommended in this respect, for several reasons. First among these is economy in land investment. This is a great consideration, especially among florists in close proximity to a city where land is quickly becoming too valuable for florists' uses. The connected style of greenhouses will allow the florist the use of practically every foot of land, thereby realizing the same amount of produce from two-thirds the amount of land required to erect separate houses.

There is a great saving in cost of construction and up-keep. The sides of greenhouses are costly to erect and are a source of expense forever afterward. This is the part of a house where decay sets in, and they have to be renewed frequently—not to mention houses getting out of shape and glass loosening all over the roof, to be lifted out some fine, cold, windy night. A stronger construction is obtained in block houses at less expense for foundations, and the wider the block naturally the greater the saving in construction and maintenance.

There is also a great saving in fuel, in favor of connected over separate houses. Houses in blocks twenty feet wide require ten runs of steam pipes to maintain a rose temperature in our locality, in the province of Quebec; if separate, the same size of house requires fourteen runs. This means forty per cent additional boiler plant, forty per cent additional piping and forty per cent additional fuel. Add to this the expense of extra mains and returns, which are needed for separate houses—and which in some cases have to be run underground or possibly outdoors—and you will realize the advantages of connected over separate houses.

Snow Storms Not Troublesome.

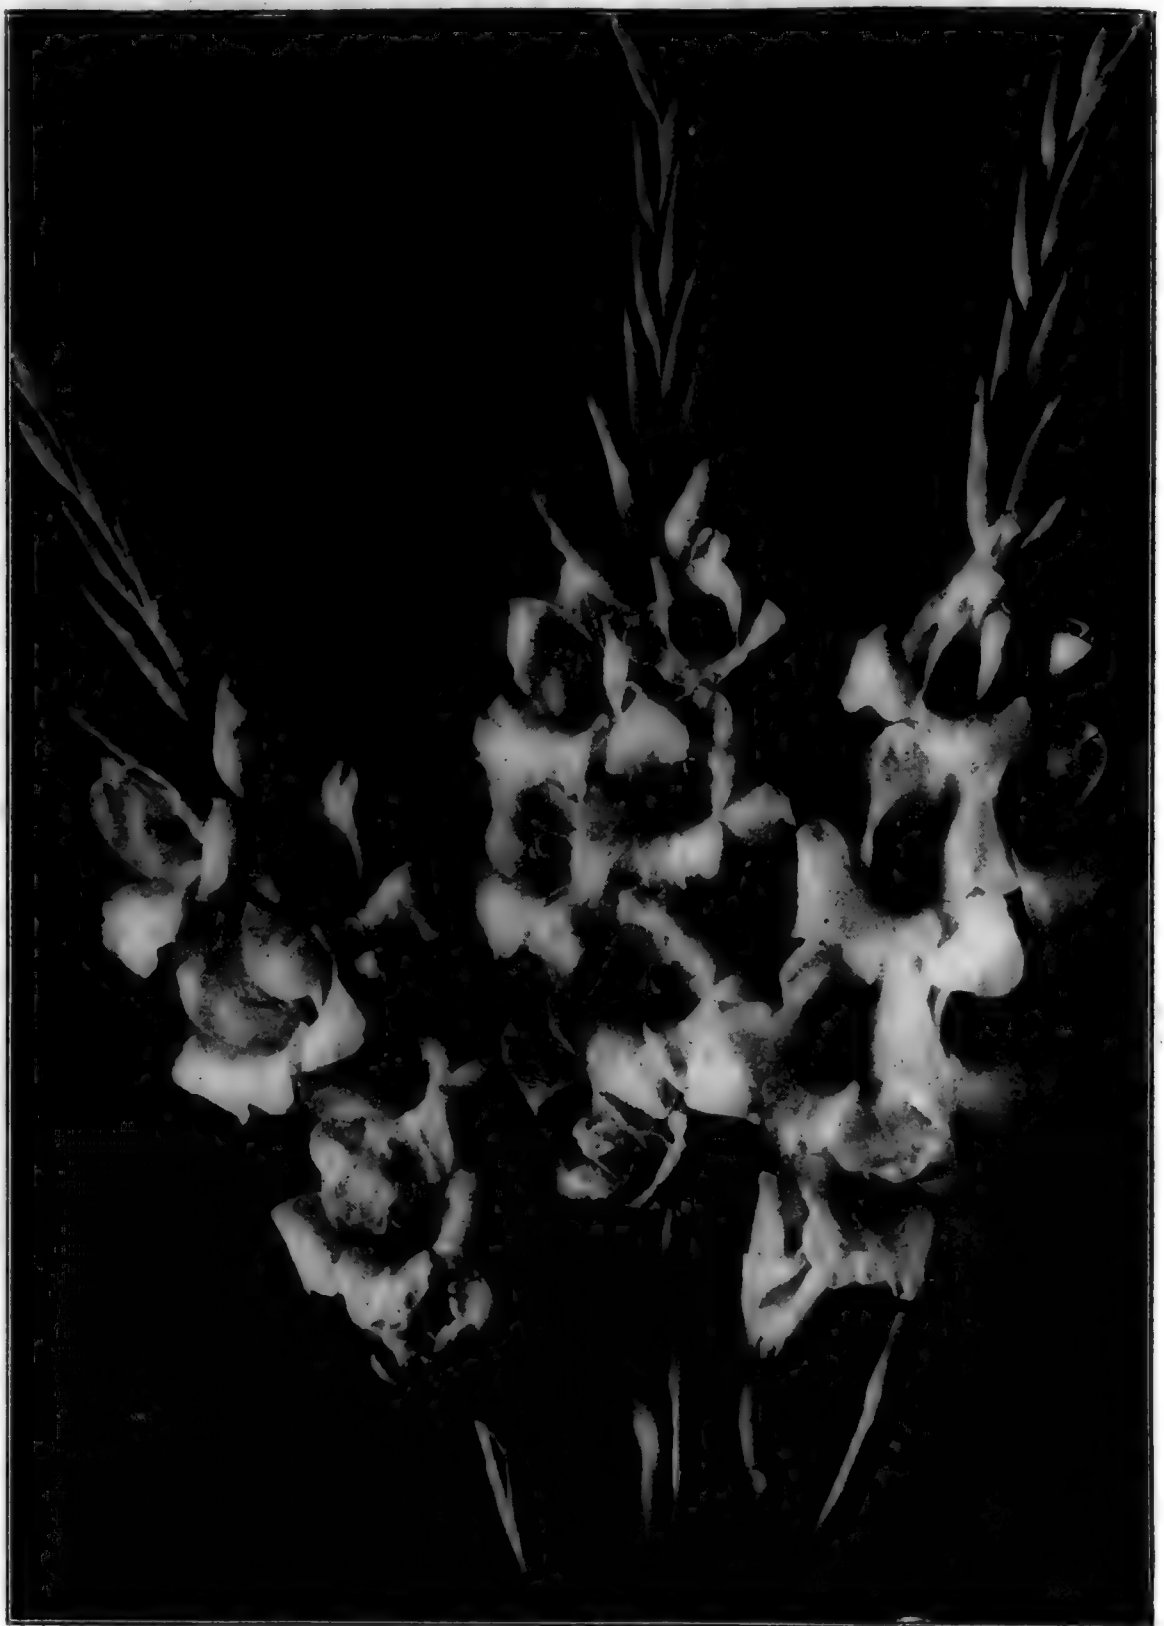

When we first built connected houses all sorts of troubles were predicted for us from the heavy snow storms which we experience in our latitude, but, as a matter of fact, we have had practically no trouble at all. Iron being a conductor of heat, the snow will melt during an ordinary snow storm nearly as fast as it falls. On the other hand, after a severe storm I have seen the gutters full of snow from ridge to ridge. Two days afterward the gutters were clear, while the north sides of the separate houses were partly covered with snow, owing to the ice hanging on the eaves and preventing the snow from sliding off. Of course this applies to iron construction. I would not, under any circumstances, favor connected houses with wood gutters in this locality, but with iron gutters and a run of steam pipes under each gutter, no trouble will be experienced from snow. Not only is the glass clear practically all winter, when light means growth, but the breakage of glass is practically nil, unless under exceptional circumstances such as we had to contend with last year, when it was raining and freezing at the same time, forming a coat of ice all over the glass, which, as it thawed, slipped down in chunks and broke the glass on the opposite roof. This has only happened once in four years, and in consideration of the advantages above named we are willing to overlook this one break.

Evenness of Temperature.

Regarding the advantages of connected over separate houses from the growers' standpoint, I would not like to go on record as saying that better results can be obtained in block houses, but will try to point out some of the advantages of large blocks of houses over smaller, separate houses for the cultivation of flowers and plants. It is a recognized fact that a better circulation of air can be obtained and a more even temperature maintained in a large than in a small house, for the reason that in separate houses variations of heat and cold are localized, mainly owing to the fact that the bulk of the heating pipes have to be placed near the sides of the houses, which are the coldest places. This is especially the case in small houses, and every grower knows the trouble and loss resulting from this excessive heat. Not only does red spider breed here, but the plants next the pipes always have a dried-up appearance which is not noticeable before heavy firing commences, and disappears entirely after firing ceases. On the other hand, in a block of houses the heating pipes can be distributed in single or double runs along every path, and a more even temperature, without excessive heat in any one part of the house, can be maintained.

Admission of Light.

Advocates of separate houses claim better light by the prevention of the roof of one shading its neighboring house and by the admission of light at the side; but the modern construction of connected houses has so reduced the light-obstructing features of the roof as to much weaken the force of this contention. An iron gutter five inches wide throws very little shade, and this shade is not stationary by any means. The shadow cast by the gutter moves with the sun, and there is absolutely no space in connected houses that cannot be utilized to full advantage. On the other hand, the advantage that advocates of separate houses claim in the increasing of the width and consequently the height of separate houses is in itself an argument in favor of connected houses, since, as far as side light and equal distribution of heat are concerned, there is practically no difference between a single house 150 feet wide and a block of connected houses 150 feet wide; but the circulation of air will be much more perfect in the block of houses than in the said single house.

For the wholesale grower of cut flowers connected houses have a great economical advantage over separate houses, and the produce from these blocks certainly cannot be excelled by the produce from separate houses. That fact is strongly in evidence at such places as the Dale estate, J. H. Dunlop's, W. Gam-mage's, and many smaller establishments throughout the country.

For the retail grower who grows a little of everything, connected houses may not be such a great advantage as to the larger grower, unless two or more houses of one class of plants are grown, when connected houses can be built and prove a success, both from a grower's and from an economic point of view.

But whatever houses you intend to build, be sure to use iron gutters, or eaves, as the case may be, not only for their lasting qualities, but for the sake of light in winter and the saving from the non-breakage of glass.

GLADIOLUS AMERICA.

Gladiolus America, which has been in a few of the wholesale markets in previous seasons, at first under the name of Ruben H. Warder, which is the title given it by Frank Banning, of Kinsman, O., is now seen in all the principal markets. Since John Lewis

Childs bought the stock of this gladiolus from Mr. Banning, he has distributed it widely and its commercial value has been tested in smaller markets than heretofore. In practically every city where it has been offered it has sold better than any other gladiolus received this season. The wholesale price has usually been double that of any other variety of the outdoor crop, $1 per dozen spikes being readily paid by retail florists after they have found how well the variety takes with their customers. Those who bought stock from Childs are not reaping any great profits in the sale of cut blooms this season. Childs asked $75 per thousand corms, so that the grower is hardly getting his money back, but he is getting an increase in stock, which will increase the production of cut blooms next season. Wholesalers agree that there should be no material reduction in wholesale prices because of a large increase in the supply of the cut spikes next season.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The Jewish New Year had its usual inspiring influence upon the market and, especially on Saturday, the demand for Beauties was far ahead of the supply. The good effect of the holiday carried over into Monday and Tuesday, and everything of quality in stock arriving was cleaned up closely.

The fact is, there is a scarcity yet of first-class stock in almost every line. Even in asters and gladioli the best sell readily and at good prices. "There is always room at the top" and there is always a certainty of disposing of a first-class article at satisfactory prices in the New York market.

The weather of September's first week was depressing. Rain, and clouds, and humidity daily. Lots of second and third-class stuff has, in consequence, sought this outlet, with unsatisfactory results. Poor stock of everything has gone begging. But the clouds are fast passing. The schools are opening, the society people are coming back and soon everybody will be busy and the strenuous anxieties of the dead months forgotten. We look for the revival right away and wholesale and retail New York are ready for it.

The fear of a panicky condition and relaxed confidence in the business world seems to have been dissipated. We hear only optimistic predictions as to the coming season. The retailers all have made ready for it and the wholesalers, too, have spared neither time nor expense in preparing themselves for the anticipated increase, which must naturally come, with increased wealth and population in the community.

The out-of-town call last week was the best of the year at the fashionable summer resorts. The prince woke things up at Newport, where the season has been none too satisfactory. There are few long-stemmed roses yet. Carnations lengthen slowly. A few were worth 2 cents the first of the week. Valley is improving. Some grand stock from Schultheis commanded 3 cents September 9. Dahlias are arriving of good quality and in many varieties. The cactus kinds sell fast. Orchids are both scarce and popular. The trade could easily take many times the quantity reaching headquarters. A great demand this winter is anticipated.

Club Meeting.

The first autumn meeting of the New York Florists' Club took place September 9, President Totty in the chair. About fifty members were present. The meeting was a most enthusiastic one. The new rooms in the Murray Hill lyceum, 160 East Thirty-fourth street, seemed to give general satisfaction. They are convenient, cheery and large enough for exhibitions.

The semi-annual report of the secretary showed a balance of nearly $2,500 in the treasury. Several standing and special committees reported and Walter Sheridan, for the trustees, reported that it had been decided to recommend that the fee for life membership be placed at $75. Mr. Totty made a plea for the ultimate permanent home of the club and announced that the new rooms had been secured for the year at a rental of $200. An appropriation of $50 for the house committee was made.

The resignation of L. W. Wheeler as member and treasurer of the club was received with regret and a message was sent him to his new home in Pasadena, Cal., wishing him health, wealth and happiness. The rules were temporarily suspended to admit of the immediate election of a treasurer.

The committee on nominations, appointed for the purpose, suggested the names of Walter Sheridan and John Donaldson. Mr. Donaldson resigned and J. K. Allen was nominated. The vote resulted, Sheridan, 23; Allen, 20; Schultz, 1, and Mr. Sheridan was declared elected. On motion of Mr. Allen the vote was made unanimous. Mr. Sheridan resigned as a trustee.

The resignations of F. G. Mentz, of Oyster Bay, and Irving C. Harris, of Cambridge, Mass., were received and accepted with regret. Messrs. Barron, Hendrickson and Duggan were proposed for membership.

The new president of the S. A. F. was called upon and made an interesting address, asking united support to make the 1908 meeting at Niagara Falls the best in the history of the society. He also spoke in behalf of the national flower show in Chicago, urging all the members to unite in making it a great success, and expressed a hope that the next national show may be in New York City.

Harry Bunyard, John Young, Patrick O'Mara, Charles Lenker, John Birnie, S. S. Butterfield, Harry Turner and others spoke of convention pleasures and some of them suggested ways whereby the S. A. F. could strengthen its work. William Duckham exhibited his silver cup, won at Philadelphia. Rev. McGee Pratt was among the speakers.

John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, exhibited twenty-seven varieties of gladioli and received the commendation of the committee on awards.

Harry Turner's exhibit of six fine plants in distinct colors of his Colosia pyramidalis, Pride of Castle Gould, received the club's certificate of merit.

Various Notes.

Another expert orchid grower has gone into the business on his own account. John Ingram, of Great Neck, has leased the three Senecawana Greenhouses and one and one-half acres of land at Oyster Bay and will grow orchids and carnations, as well as doing landscape work there.

The outing committee of the New York Florists' Club is able to announce a surplus of over $50 above all expenses as the result of the yearly celebration. The total receipts from all sources, including subscriptions, advertising and prizes, amounted to over $1,000.

One of the results of the ball game at the Philadelphia convention was a partially paralyzed arm, caused by a hit from a thrown ball, which Phil Kessler is still nursing.

Jules Vacherof, a leading landscape gardener of Paris, arrived in New York September 8. His object in visiting this country is a study of American landscape architecture, and also to find a remedy for the pests which are ruining the trees of Paris.

The Richmond County Agricultural Society's fair on Staten Island last week was a great success. The exhibits of fruits and flowers by the local florists were large and creditable. The Elizabeth Nursery made a display of well grown stock, and John Lewis Childs donated a splendid display of gladioli. The finest exhibit was that of Bobbink & Atkins, of Rutherford. Over 100 varieties of evergreens were on exhibition and three of the representatives of the firm gave the entire week to the care of the stock.

H. H. Berger & Co. report a great autumn trade, their new center having proved a most desirable advance in room, shipping facilities, etc., for their fall importations.

Phil Hauswirth and George Asmus, with their wives, have been spending the week at the Ocean avenue residence of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Traendly in Brooklyn.

H. E. Froment has returned from his mountain refuge at Stamford, N. Y. He hardly knew his headquarters, his employees having completely redecorated in his absence. Every wholesaler has been busy in refreshing and refurnishing his place of business. The "clean up" has been universal. Never saw New York from Twenty-sixth to Thirtieth streets quite so slick before.

W. G. Saltford, of Poughkeepsie, was in the city September 7. His son left the same day for an ocean trip to Maine, in an effort to rid himself of hay fever.

George Saltford is enjoying a few weeks at Rhinebeck and presumably telling a few dozen more farmers in that perfumed country "How to Make Money Growing Violets."

A. Warendorff, whose summer home is at Avenne-by-the-Sea, decorated the first prize automobile in the great carnival completed there on Labor day. Cornucopias of choicest flowers were the best feature of the decoration.

W. A. Donohoe had a big wedding at Grace church September 7, using great quantities of asters, hydrangeas and lilies. He also decorated the tables at the Simpson bachelor dinner at Delmonico's.

W. H. Gunther has had a happy summer at Sea Girt, N. J., and John has been absorbing health at Atlantic City, with the Philadelphia convention and American Association ball park on the side.

W. Taat is in the city from a trip to Europe, representing M. Van Waveren & Sons, of Hillegom, Holland, and several other European houses.

A window of Boddington's butterfly begonias attracted much attention last week, in twenty-five varieties of single and double tuberous beauties, that I have never seen excelled.

The summer schedule of hours in the wholesale section is off and it is open house now, late and early again.

Mr. Kretschmar, of Nyack, was a visitor at his nephew's, A. H. Langjahr's, September 7, and suggests that the first week in September would be a better one for the S. A. F. convention, because so many of the smaller florists, having by that time completed their plantings, could attend, where now it is impossible for them to be away.

Joseph Fenrich and family have returned to their city home after a two months' holiday at Asbury Park, N. J.

Three boxes of violets of excellent quality reached the New York market September 9, the first of the season.

Charles Weber has completed a new 200-foot house for Victory, Imperial and Pink Imperial carnations.

Robert Berry returned from Canton Monday, where he has been superintending the tree planting on the McKinley memorial grounds for Wadley & Smythe.

The autumnal auction season will begin September 17, when William Elliott's familiar voice will float out upon the breezes at 201 Fulton street. The initial sale will be of special interest because the plants to be offered are decorative stock, including some large kentias, for which there is a big demand just now.

Arthur Hunt, of Langjahr's force, entertained the stork September 8, on the arrival of a baby boy.

F. Lautenschlager, of the Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, was in the city over Sunday, the guest of A. J. Guttman, and celebrated his arrival by placing a No. 10 boiler with John Scott, of Flatbush.

O. V. Zangen's new wholesale cut flower store is on the first floor of the Coogan building.

Joseph Leikens' store on East Thirty-third street was opened for the season September 7. Mr. and Mrs. Leikens will be back from Newport September 15.

Alex. McConnell is sending glowing accounts of European travel from the continent. He is expected home early in October.

John King Duer, of 644 Madison avenue, is summering at the Maine resorts. J. J. Coan, his manager, has just returned from a trip to the popular society centers, including Long Branch, Lenox, Newport and Bar Harbor.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The wet weather which at last effectually broke the drought last week, proved discouraging for business, but the conditions now are somewhat improved and all good stock meets with a ready sale. Roses are not of more than moderate quality, but are improving. A few more carnations are arriving, of the new crop. They are not yet of much size, but, such as they are, sell well. Sweet peas were practically finished by the late rains. Asters are in good supply, although the drenching rains ruined many of these and other outdoor flowers.

Some tuberoses are seen, but they meet with a slow sale. Cosmos also is seen in moderate lots. Gladioli are less abundant. Speciosum lilies now come from outdoors. Liliun Harrisii is just about equal to the demand. Lily of the valley is only of fair quality. The demand is rather light for adiantum, smilax and asparagus. The quality of all green stock is exceptionally good.

Dahlia Exhibition.

The show September 4 and 5 was the finest ever held in Boston and we doubt if it was ever equaled in America, in so far as dahlias are concerned. The New England Dahlia Society has done much missionary work in the last year and the remarkable interest taken in the exhibits attested the growing popularity of its pet flower. The main exhibition hall and lecture hall were almost entirely devoted to dahlias and competition in the various classes was remarkably keen. Among the largest and most successful exhibits were those of W. W. Rawson & Co., Mrs. H. A. Jahn, Johnson & Hall, J. K. Alexander, J. H. Flint, E. W. Ela, W. H. Symonds, Mrs. R. O. Richardson, W. D. Hathaway, F. L. Tinkham, Geo. H. Walker, W. D. Moon, N. A. Lindsey and Mrs. L. M. Towle. The cactus and decorative varieties seemed to be the most interesting to visitors, but there was a noticeable falling off in the singles.

In the class calling for the largest display of named varieties W. W. Rawson & Co. staged what was undoubtedly the finest exhibit ever seen in Boston. Numerous large trumpet vases were used to break up the flatness of the display. This firm staged over 3,000 specimen blooms in some 500 varieties. There were many fine seedlings shown. Johnson & Hall have a superb display of these.

Non-competitive groups of dahlias were staged by Mrs. E. M. Gill, who also had other seasonable flowers; W. Whitman, Geo. B. Gill, Forbes & Gillette, H. A. Jordan, Sanderson & Lindvall, A. F. Eastbrook and Mrs. J. B. Laurence. A. H. Wingett, gardener to Charles Lanier, received a certificate for a fine yellow show dahlia, of which he staged a large vase. Sidney Hoffman also received a certificate of merit for artistic arrangements of dahlias in the forms of wreaths, table centerpieces, etc., all of which were very effective.

Among other displays, B. Hammond Tracy had a grand collection of gladioli, many being his own seedlings. Certificates were awarded to Princess Sanderson, the best white gladiolus in Mr. Tracy's estimation, and Jean Dieu la Foy. C. S. Sargent, C. Sander gardener, received honorable mention for Gladioli Georges Frick and Baron J. Hulat, both Lemoinei varieties.

R. & J. Farquhar & Co. had an extensive display of eulalias and other ornamental grasses, with quantities of Liliun auratum, L. Philippense and L. tigrinum. Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Wm. Thatcher gardener, had a good group of ornamental-leaved greenhouse plants and a dozen Clerodendron fallax. John L. Smith, gardener to Mrs. A. W. Blake, received a certificate of merit for a large specimen of Nephrolepis Barrowsii. H. A. Dreer showed Nephrolepis Amerpohlii and Nephrolepis Todeaoides, awarded honorable mention, the first named showing up the best.

Rev. T. L. Dean had a collection of helianthus; W. Whitman vases of liliuns; J. J. Rea, Helenium autumnale superbum rosum; Harvard Botanical Gardens, tuberous begonias, and Blue Hill Nurseries, a grand lot of herbaceous plants which were awarded first prize in their class, making first prize for this enterprising nursery at every competitive show this season for perennials. There was a fine display of fruits and vegetables.

On September 7 the annual display of products of children's gardens was held at Horticultural hall. In spite of the dry summer, there was an extensive and excellent display of both flowers and vegetables, competition being unusually keen. The attendance of the public showed the increasing interest in children's gardens. The Mycological Society had a good show of fungi on the same date.

The display entirely filled the main exhibition hall and competition was so keen that it was quite late in the afternoon before the judges completed their labors.

Various Notes.

The annual auction sale of stalls of the Boston Coöperative Flower Growers' Association took place, at Park Street market, September 7, when there was a large attendance of buyers. First choice went to Peirce Bros., at a premium of $88.50. J. A. Budlong Co. gave $87.50. Waban Conservatories secured two at $90 each. William Nicholson paid $97.50 and $80 for his selection; W. W. Edgar, $75; W. H. Elliott, H. N. Eaton, E. Sutermeister, Kidder Bros. and A. Parker, $72.50 each. Mann Bros. secured four stalls at $62.50 each, S. J. Goddard and T. Pegler giving similar amounts. P. G. Richwagen paid $67.50. The sale was a great success, more stalls being disposed of than in 1906 and the premiums being larger.

Samuel Neil has pulled down one of his houses in Dorchester and is rebuilding same, to be used for carnations.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club will start the fall campaign September 17. The essayist will be R. G. Leavitt on "Hybridization." A rousing attendance is expected.

W. W. Rawson & Co. have a magnificent display of dahlias at their Marblehead farm. They had over 1,500 visitors Sunday, September 1. They anticipate a big attendance on the club field day, which comes September 21.

The New England Dahlia Society made no change in its officers at the annual meeting on September 4. A salary was voted to the secretary, Maurice Fuld, which he gracefully declined. The membership continues to grow steadily.

The annual meeting of the directors of the Park Street market will occur on the first Saturday in October.

Patrick Welch and family are back from their annual vacation at Old Orchard, Maine. During the late disastrous fire there, Mr. Welch performed yeoman service in caring for burned out families.

Waban Conservatories are sending in some good Beauty roses for the season.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society visited the gardens of Walter Warburton and M. Callahan, of Taunton, September 10.

W. N. CRAIG.

LYCHNIS VISCARIA.

Lychnis viscaria splendens plena is a long name for a desirable little alpine plant, with spikes of purple flowers almost like those of a stock in their doubleness. It is one of the finest forms of lychnis, which makes an excellent border plant of much beauty. There is, however, about these lychnises a touch of coloring which makes them difficult to associate with other plants in bloom at the same time. The white varieties of L. viscaria are all right in this respect, but if we take this colored form, or those of the diurna or Flos-Cuculi types, we find this defect strongly pronounced. Thus we have to associate them mainly with white or yellow flowers to give them the requisite settings which show such a good plant as this in perfection, according to an English gardeners' magazine.

A FURTHER advance in the price of tinfoil is reported to be in immediate prospect. The demand is said to exceed the supply.

ALTHOUGH never used for publication, it is necessary for those who submit inquiries, to receive an answer, to sign their full name and address.

EVERYONE in the trade will be interested in the legal action against a grower whose neighbors hold him responsible for the spread of cucumber blight, as reported on page 33 of this issue.

THE TELEGRAPH STRIKE.

It is pretty well established that the capital stock of the Western Union Telegraph Co. is largely water and that the rates are therefore unnecessarily high. It also is pretty certain that there is some sort of an alliance between the Western Union and Postal companies in restraint of trade, as witnessed by the recent raise in rates already high. Now business has suffered from a month of the telegraphers' strike, both sides seeming indifferent to the rights of the public. If this is the kind of service the people are to get at high rates it is time Congress took a hand, as often proposed, in running the telegraph business of this country. There is no justification for the present rates except swift and accurate service. After a month of "accepted only subject to indefinite delay" the patience of the people is becoming exhausted.

COUNCIL OF HORTICULTURE.

There will be a meeting of the National Council of Horticulture at the Inside Inn, Jamestown exposition, immediately after the second session of the Congress of Horticulture on the afternoon of September 23, 1907. It is hoped there will be a good attendance, as matters of importance on the future policy of the council are to be considered.

Three of the national societies—seedsmen, florists and nurserymen—have each appropriated $200 toward the press bureau work of the Council for the coming year. Plans for conducting this work should be worked out. Other matters which may be presented will be given all possible consideration.

All national horticultural bodies are invited to be represented in addition to the four which have regular authorized delegates, the following having already become a part of the Council: Society of American Florists, American Association of Nurserymen, American Seed Trade Association and American Nutgrowers' Association.

H. C. IRISH, Sec'y.

CROP REPORT.

If there is any body of men who should be interested in the state of crops, it is composed of those who are engaged in the horticultural trades. Another year of prosperity is ensured for florists, seedsmen and nurserymen by a good harvest this fall. The government crop report as of September 1, issued at Washington September 10, covered the leading cereals, as follows:

The condition of spring wheat September 1 was 77.1, compared to 79.4 a month before, and 83.4 at the time of the 1906 harvest. On the sown area which weathered the season through the condition indicated a yield of between 215,000,000 bushels and 222,000,000 bushels. The winter wheat yield is estimated at about 409,000,000 bushels, thus bringing the yield of winter and spring wheat up to the total of 625,000,000 bushels. The 1906 crop of winter and spring wheat was finally estimated at 735,000,000 bushels.

The report made the condition of corn on the first of this month 80.2, compared to 82.8 a month before, and 90.2 September 1, 1906, with a ten-year average of 81. The decline since August 1 is attributed to cool weather, which has retarded progress of the backward crop. On an area of 98,500,000 acres, the condition indicates a total yield of about 2,518,000,000 bushels, compared to an outturn of 2,927,000,000 bushels last year, which marked the largest crop of the cereal in the history of the country. The August 1 condition suggested a yield of about 2,607,000,000 bushels.

The report indicates a large shortage in the oats crop as compared to the bumper yield of last year. It made the condition at the time of harvest only 65.5, compared to 75.6 August 1, and 81.9 September 1, 1906, with a ten-year average of 82.6. The total outturn is popularly estimated at about 745,000,000 bushels, compared to a crop of 964,000,000 bushels harvested last year.

ILLINOIS STATE FAIR.

The Illinois State Fair, at Springfield, will be the occasion for a large flower show September 30 to October 2. J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, has been appointed assistant superintendent and writes:

"It has been requested by the State Florists' Association that a member of the trade be put in this department and Mr. O'Dwyer, the head of same, has seen fit to request me to assist him. I enclose a premium list, which, through the efforts of a committee of the state association and Mr. O'Dwyer, has been largely increased over last year. It is our sincere hope that the trade will take advantage of this and make large exhibits. As the fruit exhibit will be small this year, on account of shortage of crop, we will have much more space for our exhibits, which will be staged in the same building, so this is an opportune time for the florists to show the board of agriculture, as well as the public at large, what can be done in this line. There is no doubt that more people see the floral displays at the State Fair than in any two of the best flower shows given in the best cities in the country. So from an educational standpoint it far exceeds anything in this line. It comes at a time of the year when prices are low for our products; hence there is no great sacrifice to any grower to show a few cut flowers. The prizes are liberal, the same in amount as offered by the best flower shows in the land, so the argument is entirely in favor of the trade. I sincerely hope that every grower in the state will see fit to assist. I shall be glad to send a premium list to any who will write for it."

Please publish a remedy for white fly. J. S.

The most effective and, in fact, the only remedy for white fly is hydrocyanic acid gas. The following formula is the one mostly in use for this pest, with the quantities as calculated for 1,500 cubic feet of space: Cyanide of potassium, two and one-half ounces; sulphuric acid, one pint; water, one pint.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The consensus of opinion is that last week was decidedly dull. There was no life to the demand and receipts were exceptionally heavy. The select stock cleaned out fairly well, but the low grades were sacrificed for whatever they would bring. Wholesalers express a fair degree of satisfaction with the money total of sales, but they say that average returns to the growers were decidedly low.

There is a good demand for Beauties, especially from out of town. The city buyers want only the medium length of stems. With many of the houses the quality of the Beauties now is much the best of the summer season and supplies are fairly large. There is steady improvement in the quality of other roses. Richmond continues in large supply. Brides and Bridesmaids are improving every day, in length of stem and in substance, and each day's receipts are a little heavier than before. There is now quite a large variety of roses available in this market, including Mrs. Field, Kate Moulton, Kaiserin, Carnot, La Detroit, Killarney, Uncle John, Sunrise, Chatenay, Morton Grove and one or two others. Only a few Liberties are seen.

The receipts of asters were the heaviest of the season in the last week and supplies continue above good market possibilities, though with many growers it can be seen that the crop is approaching an end. With the later varieties the quality is all that could be asked, but it is impossible to find a legitimate outlet for all. The accumulation is cleaned up at ridiculous figures, one sale having been noted at the rate of 20 cents a bucketful.

Carnations are beginning to be something of a factor again. Receipts are not yet large, but they are increasing daily and the quality is improving. Some good Enchantress may be had, with stems up to a foot long. Easter lilies are not in large supply, but there still are plenty of auratums. Gladioli continue a glut. A few good spikes sell, but the mixed stock is almost valueless. Valley commands ready sale. There is no special call for green goods.

The telegraph service still is erratic and the delivery slow and unsatisfactory. Many houses advise the use of the long distance telephone or special delivery mail as being more satisfactory.

new aster which he now is shipping to market in considerable quantity. He has three colors, white, lavender and Enchantress shade of pink. It is the largest aster coming to this market and E. C. Amling, who handles it, says it is the best seller of anything in the aster line he ever has got hold of. It is understood that Mr. Crego's object is to work up a stock of seed which will permit of the distribution of the variety in the trade.

The Orchid Situation.

During the fortnight which C. W. McKellar spent in the east after the Philadelphia convention, he looked into the orchid situation. At present cattleyas are remarkably scarce. To the buyer it seems as though the crop is much less than at any time in recent years, but Mr. McKellar says it is largely because the demand has increased so greatly that the shortage is so apparent. He reports that a good crop of Cattleya gigas will be ready about the first part of October, coming in nearly a month later than usual and at about the time the fall crop of labiata is due. Mr. McKellar says there will be a fine crop of Dendrobium formosum also due in about three weeks.

Defiance and Sincerity.

Jensen & Dekema have just finished planting their six houses. Besides the best standard carnations, their stock includes W. N. Rudd's two new varieties, which have been named Defiance and Sincerity, and which will be ready for delivery January 1, 1908. They describe Defiance as belonging to the same class as Victory or Beacon, but the color, they say, is a scarlet of unusual, perhaps unequaled, intensity and brilliance. Sincerity is a salmon pink, of a shade between Enchantress and Lawson. Ten of the forty-four benches in the range of houses are planted to these two novelties, and the fact that nearly one-fourth of the available space is thus occupied may be accepted as evidence that the firm has a good degree of confidence in these novelties. Mr. Dekema is still in California.

Schubert is Out.

John C. Schubert, who was once a prominent retail florist, on September 5 lost the position of city smoke inspector, a 4,000-dollar job, he has held for many years. His successor is a smoke specialist. Schubert succeeded Gallagher at the stand at Wabash and Monroe. He had a good business, but it ran down as he built up his political strength, until he sold out to John Mangel, about five years ago.

Must Have Dreamed It.

The following is from a florists' paper published in London, England:

"The Chicago florists have received a sad blow. High rents to pay, bad trade, street fakers taking their passing customers, and their best ones leaving for the sea or the country, are a few of the evils they have had to contend with. Now comes the news of a man being hauled up for contempt of court for sending his wife, whom he had been ordered not to molest, a bunch of flowers. This kind of molestation is not usually displeasing to the ladies, but evidently the lady in question saw some sinister meaning in the gift, and if this has the effect of damping the ardor of other husbands, beaux and beaux to be, well, what is to become of our friends the florists? Truly, like the Gilbertian policeman, their lot is 'not a happy one.'"

The esteemed London contemporary must have dreamed it. Certainly the Chicago florists are well contented with their "lot." They stand now at the threshold of what promises to be the best of their many good seasons.

The High Ridge Show.

September 1 and 2 the Luxemburger society at High Ridge held its annual exhibition of flowers, vegetables and fruits at the place of Nick Karthaus, ex-florist, at 3543 Ridge avenue, and the adjoining establishment of Joe Ebert. In prizes $1,000 was distributed, partly in silver cups, and the total cost of the two days' show was $3,000. Alderman Reinberg was in attendance during the two days and there was such a large crowd that the facilities were inadequate and will be increased next year. The exhibits were staged in tents.

Wietor Bros. were first for roses and first for carnations, a silver cup.

Adam Zender was second for roses.

Anton Then was first on floral design, and won a silver cup.

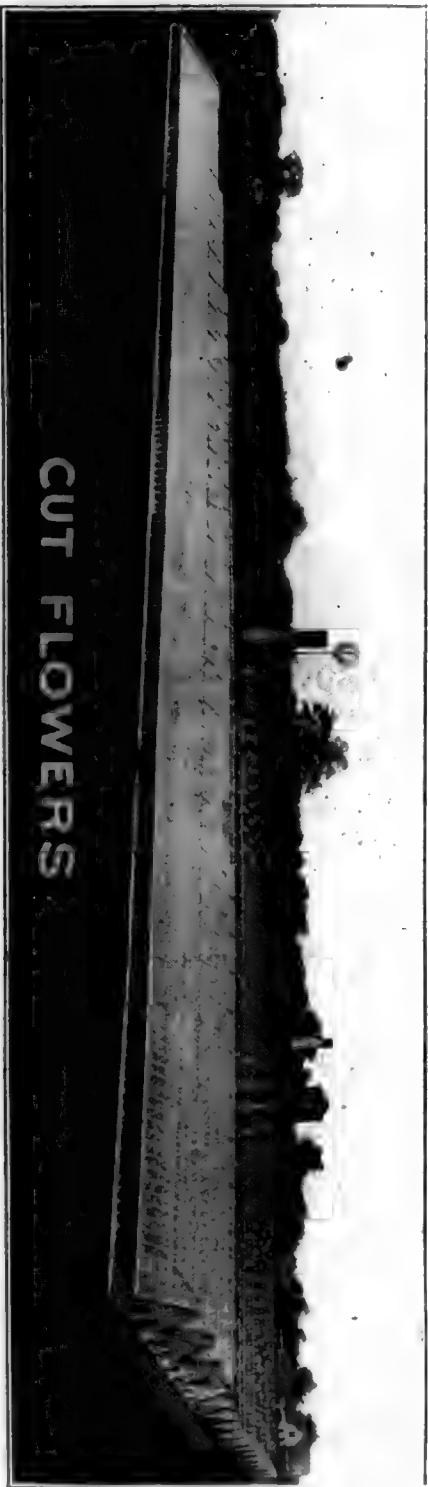

The Chicago Rose Co. was first on collection of cut flowers.

Sinner Bros. were first on asters and lilies.

John Bell, of Glencoe, was first on collection of perennials.

Fischer Bros., of Evanston, were first for palms and cypresses; also for cannas with King Humbert.

collection of annuals and perennials, not for competition, and received honorable mention.

There were five premiums for fruit and several for vegetables, Mark Schmidt being first for collection of vegetables. The whole affair was a most pleasing success.

Various Notes.

The death of Flint Kennicott September 9 was a shock to all in the market, for everyone liked him. An account of his life and work will be found in the obituary column on another page. As a mark of respect, all the wholesale houses closed from 1 o'clock to 2 o'clock on Wednesday, the hour during which the funeral was held.

Some of the retailers already are receiving violets direct from the growers.

C. M. Dickinson and Mrs. Dickinson are spending a fortnight in Michigan.

P. J. Youngquist's greenhouses, on the north side of West Foster avenue, are in the direct line of the city's future drainage operations and will be condemned by the drainage board before many months have passed. When the transfer will be made, however, is still uncertain, and Mr. Youngquist has not, as yet, made any definite plans as to what business course he will follow when the drainage board takes possession of his property. He has six houses, devoted exclusively to carnations.

George Harrer, "mayor" of Morton Grove, no longer has any active connection with the greenhouse business, but whenever he comes to town the attractions of old associations with the market are so strong that he naturally gravitates to the corner of Wabash avenue and Randolph street.

C. L. Washburn says that the demand for Killarney is starting at a most gratifying rate. Although Bassett & Washburn, in connection with many other large growers, greatly increased their planting of Killarney this season, Mr. Washburn says they cannot get enough of it to fill their orders.

A. A. Sawyer, at Oak Park, is still sending some exceptionally fine asters to E. H. Hunt. It is his own strain of Comet.

The Brides and Maids with the Pochlmann Brothers Co. have come along with remarkable rapidity in the last few weeks. The stems are the longest ever cut at this season of the year and the size and substance of the buds are equal to late autumn stock.

Philip Schupp says that J. A. Budlong's shipping trade is starting off heavier than ever this fall. Monday was an especially good day.

The mother of the Pieser brothers, of the Kennicott Bros. Co., celebrated her seventy-fifth birthday anniversary Sunday, September 8. There was a large gathering of friends and relatives.

It is stated that Marshall Field & Co. will this season have the largest decoration for the fall opening ever put up by any mercantile establishment, eclipsing their own best previous efforts. The Wittbold Co. will supply the plants. The cut flower bill will run into the thousands of dollars and Fields are looking about to see where they can get the most for their money.

Miss A. L. Tonner says that the supply business with the A. L. Randall Co.

is opening in two or three times the volume that it did last year.

E. C. Amling was at Richmond, Ind., September 5 and 6. He says that the new rose of the E. G. Hill Co., named Rhea Reid, is a wonder. He says that for early blooming qualities and luxuriance of growth he has never seen its superior.

The Florists' Club will hold its first meeting of the season at Handel hall this evening, September 12. A lively session is in prospect.

N. J. Wieter says that Wieter Bros. are able to cut white chrysanthemums in limited quantity at any time now, but that they anticipate no special call so long as asters remain so plentiful and so good.

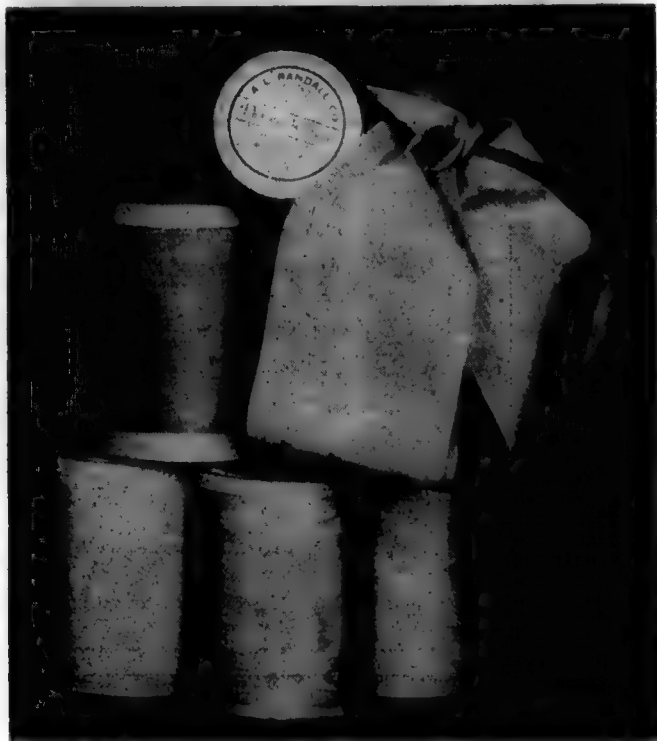

L. R. Bohannon is now with the Alpha Floral Co., at Wabash avenue and Adams street. The management of Fleischman's north side store now devolves upon Harry Rubel, with J. B. Blackstone, formerly of Washington, D. C., as the decorator and maker-up.

Peter Reinberg continues to cut increasing quantities of the Mrs. Field rose. A. C. Spencer says that this variety has been the most profitable thing they ever grew for a summer crop. They have been marketing thousands every day right through the summer, at prices ranging from 3 cents to 8 cents, but averaging from 4 cents to 6 cents for the majority of the cut.

The trade will learn with regret that Edgar Sanders is steadily failing in health and that he is not now able to receive the calls of the many who took pleasure in running in upon him whenever opportunity presented.

Winand's wholesale store, is a new addition to the staff of Vaughan & Sperry.

George Reinberg keeps right on adding to the variety of stock to be grown. For the next season sweet peas are to be a winter crop.

A stranger visited Schofield, at 184 North State street, the other day and ordered $600 worth of funeral work, stating that the money had been nearly all collected at the offices of the Illinois Central railroad following the death of an official. He suddenly recollected that he was to call at a hospital just at that hour to see his wife, who was ill, and Schofield gave him a nice bunch of roses. Calling at the I. C. offices for further details, it was found the whole thing was a fake. One thought to be the same party has worked the same scheme on other retailers, apparently with no other object than to secure a dollar's worth of flowers for nothing.

Joseph Smely was in from Aurora one day this week and reports business good.

One of the leading growers states that it is his opinion that O. J. Friedman buys more American Beauties, month after month, than any other retailer in Chicago.

A. C. Schaefer, who is Ed Winterson's brother-in-law and partner in Winter-son's Seed Store, is taking life a little easier now that the bookkeeper, who was Miss Amanda Davidson, is again on duty. August 15 she became Mrs. C. V. Nelson.

L. Coatsworth returned Sunday after a week spent at the Benthay-Coatsworth plant at New Castle. He says the Beauties are coming along finely and that Killarney is giving a big cut, though still not long in stem.

A. S. Halstead, of Belleville, Ill., was a visitor this week.

Among the week's visitors were William Henry Evans, of Colorado Springs, returning from an eastern trip, and S.

MILWAUKEE.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. is this month mailing out copies of its new catalogue, to which it has given the rather unusual name of Pollworth's Inventory and Supply Directory. The book is noteworthy as showing the rapid development this house has made in the last few years. The pages are 10x13 and the book contains ninety-two of them, printed on heavy calendered paper, so that the half-tone illustrations show up in fine shape. The Pollworth establishment, including the greenhouses, contains about everything the florists of the northwest require for their season's business. In the catalogue a number of pages are devoted to the plant department, others to bulbs, and the body of the book to the supply business, which is rapidly becoming the leading feature with this firm. They handle not only retailers' requisites, but a large line of supplies for the grower, and the house is pleased to report that business starts off this year much ahead of that of any previous season.

The Pollworth catalogue bears the imprint of the Pollworth Press, Milwaukee, one of the Pollworth brothers being engaged in the printing business in a large way.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The cool nights have improved the young stock greatly. The supply is increasing, but the demand seems irregular for almost everything except Beauties. The retail trade so far is nothing to brag of, but in some cases we find that trade has picked up a great deal since the schools opened. Society folks are beginning to arrive home from their summer vacation, and not until they are all back can we say that the florists' business is where it should be.

At the wholesale houses there seems to be an abundance of roses of all kinds from new stock, with stems still short, but fairly good flowers. Plenty of them went to waste last week for want of demand. Beauties, though, are having a big call, with good prices for short and medium stems. There are quite a few carnations coming in from the field, but they are of poor quality and selling cheap. Asters are too many for the demand, though extra good stock sells well. There is plenty of good smilax, asparagus and fancy ferns, with good demand.

Various Notes.

T. F. Judge, representing the Seranton Florists' Supply Co., was in town last week calling on the trade.

Oswald Amless, living at 3520 Ohio avenue, in South St. Louis, was accidentally drowned last week, at East Carondelet, while waiting for the ferry boat. The body was found September 4, and the funeral took place on the following day. Mr. Amless was well known among the growers.

Martin Reukauf, who represents H. Bayersdorfer & Co., of Philadelphia, was at the Jefferson last week, showing samples.

W. B. Brown, of Detroit, stopped here a day on his way to Mexico to look after mining interests, where he will spend a month.

Frank J. Farney, who represents the A. L. Randall Co., Chicago, arrived in town September 9.

A. G. Greiner's place, where he makes cacti a specialty, is a great attraction for visitors during the summer months, on account of his fine collection, which numbers 14,000. Mr. Greiner, who has been sick most of the year, is now much improved.

J. W. Dunford's place, at Clayton, is in fine shape for fall business and he expects a good cut from his large stock of roses, violets and carnations. At present he is cutting a fine lot of Lilium longiflorum, for which H. G. Berning reports a good demand.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, was a caller last week. Mr. Guy reports a good summer trade and all outdoor stock looking well.

The Ellison Floral Co., at Taylor and Olive streets, has had quite a lot of large funeral designs the last month. Mr. Ellison is still up north, but is expected

C. A. Kuehn is receiving large consignments of white and pink Cochet roses, the first grades of which have a good demand. Asters, too, have been arriving in great abundance, with only the large white and purple selling well.

The new trustees of the Florists' Club, who will be installed in office Thursday afternoon, September 12, will, it is said, inaugurate a series of social meetings during the winter months, also a chrysanthemum exhibition in the club rooms during November. The trustees this year are Charles Schoenle, W. C. Smith and Carl Beyer, who will work hard to make the club meetings interesting to the members. President-elect Young, Secretary-elect Bentzen and Treasurer-elect Weber will work in conjunction with them to make the meetings so interesting that they will be largely attended.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The month opened much like any other September and, while everyone hopes that business will improve after August is past, we are not far enough along to notice it as yet. Gladioli and asters are here for fair, with Beauties, lilies and roses fighting for next place. The result is, the wholesalers have much more stock than the trade can take care of and prices are about as low as they can possibly get, especially on the low grades of stock.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club's regular meeting September 3 was a success and, if not the largest, made up in enthusiasm what it lacked in numbers. Among the interesting talks was one on asters, in which a servant of the city who has had phenomenal success with asters volunteered the information that he had the formula for something that will destroy the aster beetle. As that is just what we all are looking for, a demand was made for the prescription. Now, while the discoverer admits that he is not going to patent it, or put it on the market in any way himself, he refused to divulge his secret and thus puts himself on record as being the first member of the club who has been unwise enough to mention anything in connection with his stock that he was not willing to tell all about. John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, N. Y., sent one of his gladiolus displays. It elicited much favorable comment, as the stock and variety were exceptionally fine. Frank Banning, of Kinsman, O., was there with America, 1900, Augusta, a new pink seedling, and a lot of unnamed seedlings. This collection would have gladdened the heart of any fancier of gladioli, and he has a trick of putting some very good apples in the boxes, which are enjoyed by all. H. P. Joslin, Ben Avon, showed assorted gladioli. Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., sent blooms of a yellow chrysanthemum, Golden Glow. The buds were taken July 1 and the blooms were cut September 1 and reached the club in fine shape. It is certainly a good thing and undoubtedly the best early yellow mum seen in this city. Dixmont, through Mr. Zimmerman, sent a general collection of hardy flowers. Schenley park is always there with a show, this time a bunch of fine asters, also gladioli and sunflowers.

O. F. Beet has bought L. I. Neff's Penn avenue store and will take possession at once. Hoo-Hoo.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Conditions are rather unfavorable at present, the wholesalers contrasting the first two weeks in September with the months of July and August, to the detriment of the former. It is only fair, however, to consider the increase in receipts, which has not been offset by any marked increase in business. The result is dullness, with extra effort required to market many varieties of flowers, at any price. Beauties sold particularly well on Saturday and Monday, the Jewish New Year. This stock is of excellent quality. Tea roses have been enormously overdone. To instance this, a faker, whose word can be depended upon, says that he bought 8,000 tea roses for $6.

Asters continue the leading factor in the market, the retailers using them more freely than any other flower. The quality has fallen off a little in some quarters, but still averages well, though there are too many of the poorer grades. Purple asters are less overdone than during the last two weeks. The supply of gladioli really seems unlimited, the wholesalers marketing only a small portion of what they receive, or might receive, were they in demand. The light colors continue favorites. Dahlias have made their appearance in force, a number of the leading specialists at Hanco and Hammon-ton sending the stock on Saturday and the following days to some of the leading wholesale houses. The varieties so far in evidence are pretty well divided between the pompon, cactus, and decorative classes: Sylvia, Storm King, Lemon Queen, Eureka, Arabella, Standard Bearer, Lyndhurst, Livoni, Countess of Lonsdale, and Mrs. Jones. Despite the warm weather, the better stock is sold at fair prices.

Cattleya labiata and oncidiums can be had in small quantities. Valley is plentiful. Carnations are improving in quality and increasing in quantity, though they are still by no means plentiful. The stems are short and the flowers of moderate size. Outdoor flowers of other varieties find limited sale.

The September Meeting.

The September meeting of the Florists' Club was fairly well attended. Vice-President Hahman presided. Reports were received from the various committees in charge of the S. A. F. convention, and all except the executive committee were discharged. These reports showed that the finances had been carefully managed, the expenditures being well within the amount provided; while everything proposed had been carried out. There was some discussion on the national flower show, the general opinion being that November would be a more popular time than the spring, although a better show could probably be provided in March or April. A resolution of sympathy for Joseph Heacock, at the loss of his son, was passed. Charles E. Meehan's paper on "The Philosophy of Wholesaling," which appeared last week, was well received. John Westcott complimented the workers on the success of their efforts in entertaining the S. A. F. and in one of his most telling speeches declared that Philadelphia would go to Niagara 100 strong. Robert Craig and others spoke on the work of the convention.

Then the Ladies' Bowling Club was presented with the silver trophy, emblematic of second prize won in the convention contest. Miss Graham, captain of the ladies' team, accepted the trophy and handed it to President Hahman, who received it on behalf of the club. Mr. Hahman spoke feelingly of the pleasure that he felt in accepting the custody of this first ladies' prize to grace our trophy cases. Nominations for officers to serve during the ensuing year were as follows: President, Samuel S. Pennock, Fred Hahman; vice-president, William Graham, William P. Craig; treasurer, J. William Colflesh; secretary, David Rust, Edwin Lonsdale. The election will take place at the next meeting, Tuesday evening, October 1.

Various Notes.

Frank Gaul, the popular manager of the Century Flower Shop, has made his reappearance at this post, much to the pleasure of his business associates.

M. Rice & Co. report many visitors in the city during the last few days, including some from California.

The Leo Niessen Co. is receiving dahlias from J. M. Bassett, Hammon-ton, N. J. The flowers are fine.

WASHINGTON.

Current Comment.

There is not much change in the cut flower business. Some few are kept quite busy; the majority are full of complaints. George Shaffer reports business good for the entire summer, mostly in funeral work.

The windows are all decorated much better for this time of the year than heretofore; any prospective customer can be held up at almost any store, if attraction will do it. Mr. Shaffer had a beautiful arrangement of gladiolus and Clematis paniculata. The Washington Florist Co. has a handsome high-handled basket made of Physostegia Virginiana and Clematis paniculata, with a cluster of Kaiserin roses on the handle; it was very attractive and well gotten up.

F. H. Kramer is much elated over the behavior of his Queen Beatrice rose this summer. He thinks more of it than ever.

The Club Meeting.

The club had an interesting meeting September 3. The chrysanthemum show committee reported progress. The schedule has been sent to all prospective exhibitors; it can also be had by addressing Charles McCauley, Eighteenth and Kearney streets, N. E., Washington. The club received an invitation to visit the dahlia farm of R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co., at White Marsh, Md., September 17. There will be a large number present. The fine trip last year is still fresh in the memory of those who attended.

Joseph R. Freeman, being requested to say a few words for the Florists' Club in receiving the cup won in Philadelphia, said that there could be no time or place more appropriate to express his personal feelings toward the loyal friends who showed their confidence in him during the recent convention. In an extremely happy vein he paid tribute to two classes of voters, those who were his own friends and who worked for his election and those who openly and in manly fashion championed the cause of the successful candidate. He then thanked the bowling team for its diligence, courage and skill, as demonstrated by the winning of the beautiful cup handed over to the club through the generosity of the Philadelphia brethren. He regretted that the cup was full of nothing more substantial than his personal good will and gratitude, of which it was full to overflowing. He paid a glowing tribute to the Philadelphia Florists' Club, which, he said, made every Washingtonian feel as if he were a special guest, and said that he had no doubt they succeeded in conveying the same feeling to those from all other places. He said the series of entertainments was complete and satisfying, that the florists of Philadelphia had made Philadelphia in fact what it was in name, the City of Brotherly Love, and that their generosity and attention would live as long as the memory of the recipients of their bountiful hospitality.

By Wm. Gude's motion, Mr. Freeman and Mr. McCauley were appointed as a committee to get up a suitable letter thanking the Philadelphia club for the noble manner in which they had entertained the florists from Washington.

NEW ORLEANS.

From what can be learned in a general way, the crop of chrysanthemums seems to be growing quite satisfactorily, outdoor plants seeming ahead of the ones under glass. In fact, growing chrysanthemums in a closed house requires more attention and expense than is put on the ones outside, which can be covered at budding time. The season has been quite favorable and if quantity and quality are not good the weather should not be blamed for it.

C. W. Eichling is getting ready for his fall trade. Boxes of bulbs are unpacked all over his place. His Adiantum hybridum, of which he makes a specialty, are clean and ready to start after their summer's rest. His stock of palms is free of insects.

Chairman John Frawley, of the budget committee of the city council, is asking for an increase of appropriation for the City park and Audubon park. M. M. L.

DULUTH, MINN.—W. W. Seekins was busy with funeral work last week and has had a good many reception and wedding decorations, including an especially large one at the Spalding hotel. The wedding decorations were carried out in pink and white roses exclusively. He is at present growing all his own roses at the Woodland greenhouses. Flower trade is good here and the florists cannot complain.—H. G. E.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., George S. Green, Chicago; First Vice pres., M. H. Duryea, New York; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland.

CANTALOUPEs are yielding an abundant crop this season.

SEPTEMBER started dry and hot in the Texas trucking districts.

At least a fortnight more without frost is needed in the seed corn fields.

THOMAS COX, of the Cox Seed Co., San Francisco, is about to start on an Eastern trip.

THE western state fairs are offering liberal premiums for exhibits of pedigreed seed corn.

THE Texas truckers are preparing to largely increase the acreage in fall crops as compared to last year.

THE up-to-date catalogue man is now busily engaged on his 1908 books, to have the southern edition ready for mailing in December.

THE weather for the last month has been unfavorable to grain crops and estimates of probable yields of the principal cereals are considerably reduced.

C. F. WOOD's paper, the Market Growers' Journal, published at Louisville, estimates the onion set crop at slightly more than 390,000 bushels, as against about 525,000 bushels in 1906.

F. W. BRUGGERHOF says that it should be the aim of every seedsman, as it is of Thorburn & Co., to supply only seeds of the best possible quality, for such seeds will almost sell themselves.

A DOLLAR or two spent on retouching a photograph may mean many dollars additional sales, not only on that one item, but on other items in the catalogue, for the influence of a cut, good or bad, extends to other varieties than the one it illustrates.

As price competition becomes closer and closer between wholesale seedsmen, the country firms find that they are at no disadvantage as compared to those who do business where ground values are stated by the square foot and where cartage, storage, handling and incidental expenses are at the maximum.

SEEDSMEN will be interested in the injunction proceedings begun by farmers at Charleston, S. C., against a neighbor whom they hold responsible for the spread of cucumber blight. As reported on page 33, they seek by injunction to stop his growing cucumbers in his greenhouses.

THE Planters' Seed Co., Springfield, Mo., has commenced to erect a warehouse on the Frisco and Missouri Pacific tracks, to facilitate the handling of the carload business. The building now occupied will be used for offices and a retail store. Arthur G. Lee, the seedsman at Fort Smith, Ark., owns a controlling interest in the company.

MALLERY & WHITE, De Smet, S. D., are having a contest with three prizes for sweet peas, competition open only to those who bought seeds of Mallery & White. The contest is being advertised in local papers, which are admitted to the mails, although the plan is exactly similar to the one used by Montgomery Ward & Co., Chicago, and which resulted in that firm's seed catalogue being barred from the mails last spring.

A. L. DON, New York, says that a seedsman doing a strictly retail business may not make as much noise as one who chases hither and yon after quantity orders, and then for the stock with which to fill them, but that the man dealing out packets, quarts and pounds gets just as many of the comforts of life, and possibly more. Mr. Don is in a position to know.

REPORTS from pickle packers in the west show that crop conditions vary greatly, a fairly good yield reported in some sections and an extremely poor one in others. Too cool nights in some localities are hurtful. Minnesota reports indicate a smaller yield than expected, reports from Kansas points say the pack will be about two-thirds, and dry weather is hurting the cucumbers in Nebraska.

ARTICLES of incorporation of the Carpenter Seed Co., Provo City, Utah, have been filed. The company will do a general wholesale and retail seed business, with the principal place of business in Provo City. The capital stock is $20,000 in shares of the par value of $100 each. The directors and officers are: G. J. Carpenter, president; Wealthy Graham, vice-president; Addie Carpenter, secretary and treasurer; Maude Hopson and Albert Hopson. The residence of Maude and Albert Hopson is Grand Junction, Colo. The other officers' residence is Provo City.

the present one, some time in the near future, possibly this fall.

Mr. Gundestrup's estimate of his onion-set crop is encouraging as compared with the reports received from other sources. His stock of onion sets is grown for him, from seed furnished by himself, on many different tracts of ground on the northwest side of the city, and the returns he has received from some of these tracts indicate, he says, that his crop will be at least fair, if not exceptionally good. He says that the crop, so far as already delivered to him, has averaged seven or eight bushels to the pound of seed, and in at least one case as high as twelve bushels to the pound. The stock, also, is good and sound in quality. It is now arriving at his warehouse at the rate of nearly 2,000 bushels daily, but the receipts will soon begin to decrease in volume and most of the stock will be in storage within the next three weeks.

Mr. Gundestrup also deals extensively in mushroom spawn, and nine-tenths of his stock of this article is imported from England. He spent most of this summer in Europe, visiting the great centers of the seed trade. He says that European seed crops are not only much below the average, but, on account of the coldness of the season, are maturing very slowly and the harvest will be the latest on record. Though the quantity of the yield will undoubtedly be small, it is impossible now to make positive predictions as to the quality, but fears are entertained that many of the crops will not ripen properly. Mr. Gundestrup says the weather was unseasonably and almost uncomfortably cold during almost the whole of June, July and August, the months he spent in Europe.

SEED CROPS IN FRANCE.

According to a report in the Bulletin des Cultivateurs de Graines, the seed trade in France last season was satisfactory and, the warehouses having been nearly cleared of old seeds, especially of cabbage seed, higher prices are hoped for. A good harvest is anticipated, more especially in the south, where the climatic conditions have been favorable. In the north and central departments more rain fell than was good for seeds, but improvement followed at the end of the growth is slow and aphides have made their appearance. Seeds of table carrots and cattle-feeding carrots should fetch good prices. With the exception of certain crops in central France, where the rainfall worked mischief, the condition of the seed crops leaves nothing to be desired. Cabbages promise well. The crops of hearting cabbage seed in the vicinity of Paris and in central France are somewhat deficient; but in the south the harvest will be excellent. The crop of brussels sprouts is safe, and that of cauliflower in Italy will be excellent. Kohlrabi is everywhere good. Cucumber and gherkin seed came up badly in the north and center, owing to wet, cool weather at the period of seed-sowing. In the south the plants suffered much less. Beans germinated badly, and the quantity sown in the south was considerable. Cabbage, lettuce and summer and winter endive are expected to yield normal crops. Onions promise a good crop, but the promise may be spoiled at the last moment. Of the chief variety, Vertus, several cultures in central France are diseased, while about Paris and in the south the condition of the plants is extraordinarily fine. Leeks are excellent, but land occupied by this crop is limited in extent; the demand will about be covered, and medium prices obtained. Parsley showed well for seed, and a good harvest is expected. Peas will be plentiful, but as the demand is constantly increasing, dealers are expecting to get good prices. The harvest commenced early in July. Salsify and scorzonera promise good crops in France and Holland, but the amount of land under these crops is not great.

HAERENS OF SOMERGEM.

Somergem, in Belgium, not far from the great horticultural center at Ghent, is known to many in the trade in America simply as the town in which the Haerens Co. is located. The fame of Haerens has preceded that of Somergem because for many years this enterprising firm has made special effort to supply such stock as is in demand for the American trade, azaleas being one of the principal items. They have from time to time put out a number of new azaleas which proved popular, the variety Haerensiana being especially well liked.

The Haerens Co. is composed of John B. Haerens and Henry Wille. They produce principally azaleas, araucarias, bay trees, palms, etc., for the American trade and have built up a large business, necessitating annual additions to their plant. H. Frank Darrow, their American representative, who recently returned to New York after a visit to Europe, says that the Haerens Co. will this year add several large palm houses. Azaleas are grown in great numbers and, a point of special interest, are kept in the best of condition by the application of liberal supplies of water by means of an American device, the Skinner system of mechanical watering, the pipes running the entire length of their fields. They also have the sprinkling system in the houses and are well pleased with it. Some new varieties of azaleas are of special interest, having gained certificates of merit at the Ghent expositions, and will soon be sent to America. Among them are some fine white sorts for Easter and some early-flowering pink varieties for Christmas. One block which pleased Mr. Darrow particularly contained 20,000 plants of Ardisia crenulata. He says they were the finest lot he ever saw. A number are being grown three and four plants in a large pot or tub and will make a fine display when berried.

Two Grand Novelties for 1908

Eschscholtzia Dainty Queen

We have the greatest pleasure in being able to introduce this exquisite new color in Eschscholtzias. It is so delicate and striking that we are certain it will excite universal admiration, especially with the ladies, and become one of the greatest favorites of this charming race of our new improved compact Californian Poppies. It is almost impossible to adequately describe its soft and delicate shades of color, but we are having a plate prepared which we think will do justice to its beauty.

The color is a tender blush, or pale coral pink, slightly deeper toward the edges, with a groundwork of delicate cream, and like Intus Rosea, our introduction of two years ago, the petals are quite the same color inside as outside, so that the color effect is the same when the flower is open as when closed—a quite unusual point in all other Eschscholtzias.

It has the same upright, compact habit as Eschscholtzia Intus Rosea, forming a small, compact bush, very free blooming, with the flowers standing well above the bright green foliage, which gives it a singularly attractive appearance for bedding or massing.

$15.00 per 100 packets; $2.00 per dozen packets. (25c retail.)

Godetia Crimson Glow

This splendid new Godetia will be eagerly sought after when once known. It forms a compact little bush about 9 inches in height, completely smothered with flowers of the most dazzling, intense crimson. A bed of this variety produces a vivid effect, the intensity of which it is impossible to describe. We are having a plate prepared, which will perhaps convey some idea of its splendid color, but to be fully appreciated, it must be seen growing. In habit it resembles our Godetia Sunset, which is without doubt the most compact in habit and most free blooming Godetia yet introduced.

$15.00 per 100 packets; $2.00 per dozen packets. (25c retail.)

blight spreading on the Neck, and that as long as he plants and grows cucumbers under glass, the blight will continue to ruin the crops of the farmers near him who plant in the open air.

Mr. West has eight houses in which he grows cucumbers. He values his plant at about $15,000. By planting in boxes under glass, he has been able to produce about 700 bushels of cucumbers each year, grown during the winter, and marketed at a time when they bring from $1 to $1.50 a dozen. He has found that plants affected by the blight will, when transplanted under the glass, recover and outgrow this disease and produce fine cucumbers. His attorney went on further to show to the court that after the season was over Mr. West carefully fumigated his houses with sulphur, killing all vegetable and animal life in the tightly closed houses.

Attorney Von Konitz, appearing for Mr. West, went on to show by reading various affidavits and letters that there is blight all over the cucumber belt, where greenhouses are not near; that it had been in this part of the country for many years, before Mr. West started to grow cucumbers in a greenhouse; that in many farms not near Mr. West's place the blight was prevalent; that a cold, damp, late spring caused blight, and other facts. His affidavits were read to show that it was unreasonable to lay the cause of the blight which ruined the Neck crops to the greenhouses of Mr. West.

By the petitioners it was shown, through their attorneys, that it was the opinion of a government expert that the greenhouses did cause the spread of blight among the cucumber crops on Charleston Neck. Affidavits were read from many farmers planting cucumbers in the neighborhood of Mr. West, stating directly that they believed the blight came from his greenhouses, and that it was harbored there through the winter; furthermore, that they had observed the crops nearest his greenhouses withered first. Many of the neighboring planters said they were on friendly terms with Mr. West and stated their belief that his greenhouses spread blight only because they sincerely thought it was so, from observation and the government reports. Estimates of losses from blight were given in the affidavits.

The case will be fought to a finish and the outcome will be watched with much interest.

fight. Tomatoes and cucumbers seem to be its favorites, but it is not uncommon on lettuce, and in some localities it is very severe on roses.

Where an establishment is thoroughly infested with these worms there is little chance for the proprietor to make expenses until they are exterminated. This may be accomplished in either of the following three ways: Probably the cheapest way is to remove all the old soil from the benches and haul it away from the houses, where it can be spread out to freeze through in winter. The benches should be thoroughly cleaned and scrubbed and given a heavy coat of fresh lime whitewash. Then, if the dirt and refuse are cleaned from the aisles and under the benches, they are ready to re-fill, but the tools, wagons, etc., and the spot where the new soil is to be dumped, should be thoroughly scraped and the fresh soil selected from a new field. This method will sometimes entirely rid the place of the eel worms, and where it does not it will reduce them so that little damage will be done to the next crop.

Another method, which can be easily employed by some growers, is to freeze the houses up in midwinter by shutting down and draining the boilers and all pipes, and opening the ventilators, until the ground is frozen quite deep. Care should be taken that no water is left in sags in any of the pipes, to freeze and burst them.

The surest, but most expensive, way is to sterilize the soil in the beds or benches. For particulars about soil sterilizing, see the article on page 29 of the REVIEW for August 15.

The eel worm is so minute that it cannot be seen without a microscope. It attacks only the roots of the plants, causing a growth of bead-like galls along the roots. Sometimes they are so severely attacked as to become a tangled mat just below the surface of the soil, at the stem. Even where the plants are not killed they cannot produce anything like a fair crop when so attacked.

BODDINGTON'S CHRISTMAS SWEET PEAS

BODDINGTON'S EXTRA EARLY CHRISTMAS WHITE SNOWBIRD.

An exceptionally early Sweet Pea for indoor flowering—will bloom six weeks after sowing. Color clear white, upon long stems; habit fairly dwarf, and of exceptionally free flowering qualities. Trade pkt., 50c; 30c per oz.; $\frac{1}{4}$ lb., \$1.00; $\frac{1}{2}$ lb., \$1.50; lb., \$2.50.

CANARY. Similar to the above, but flowers of an exceptionally good yellow. Trade pkt., 50c; 30c per oz.; $\frac{1}{4}$ lb., \$1.00; $\frac{1}{2}$ lb., \$1.50; lb., \$2.50.

FLAMINGO. Color scarlet; free flowering and early. As the crop of this variety was small, we can only send out packets this season for trial. Pkt., 25c; 5 pkts., $1.00.

BODDINGTON'S CHRISTMAS PINK. This is the earliest and most profitable and useful Sweet Pea in cultivation, as by sowing the seed under glass in latter part of August flowers can be cut from Thanksgiving on during the winter months. 10c per oz.; $\frac{1}{4}$ lb., 30c; $\frac{1}{2}$ lb., 50c; lb., 75c.

BODDINGTON'S CHRISTMAS WHITE. A grand companion to Christmas Pink. 10c per oz.; $\frac{1}{4}$ lb., 30c; $\frac{1}{2}$ lb., 50c; lb., 75c.

Our Fall BULB CATALOGUE now ready, if you have not already secured one—send a postcard today. Besides a full collection of seeds for fall sowing it contains a list of over

BUFFALO.

Old Home Week.

The week of September 1 to 7 was set apart in Buffalo as Old Home week. The affair was a big success and, while it did not help business in general, we believe the florists were benefited by it. Decorations were extensive in all lines and it was one holiday from Monday till Saturday.

M. J. Palmer & Son had the contract for supplying the laurel which was used for decorating the wires along Main street.

The weather was cool and threatening the whole week and it finally did rain on Thursday, the day Governor Hughes dedicated the famous McKinley monument. To celebrate this event, M. J. Palmer erected a miniature monument of white asters, which was worthy of much praise and the people certainly did seem to appreciate it, judging from the way they blocked the window.

Another event of the week was the automobile parade. Elaborate decorations were used here, mostly of bunting and hardy flowers. The cars were divided into classes and Mr. Schoenhut, the popular east side florist, carried away the first prize for the small touring cars. His car was decorated with paniculata and small electric lights.

Chas. H. Netch had a float for the whole week and appeared in every parade which took place.

Various Notes.

The Wm. Scott Co. has installed a big new Kroeschell boiler, to replace two old smaller ones.

The convention at Niagara Falls next year will be the means of reviving the spirit of the Buffalo Florists' Club. The club is to have a meeting very shortly.

R. A. S.

The Corfu Enterprise has the following to say of the outing of the employees of the Wm. Scott Co., August 28:

"The annual outing of the employees of the Wm. Scott Co., of Buffalo, was held here yesterday. About twenty employees of the Buffalo office arrived here on the noon train and were met by the employees of the company's local branch. They all adjourned to the Union hotel, where a bountiful dinner was spread, covers being laid for thirty. In the afternoon a ball game was played between the Buffalo and Corfu employees, which resulted in a victory for the Corfu boys by a score of 19 to 10. After the ball game all hands adjourned to the company's East Main street property, where a program of sports was carried out, followed by a bountiful supper served on the lawn.

"Our old friend, Wm. Scott, was with the party and stayed till the finish. He took great interest in the day's sport and, as ever, carried that good-natured smile. He has still a warm spot for old Corfu and his friends here wish him and his enterprising company every success."

OUR Fresh Stock of Sphagnum Moss, also Peat, is ready for shipment. It is of the best quality. No old stock. Guaranteed to be A1. Sample bale shipped on demand. Good references. For further information, apply to

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 33d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June, 1908.

THE average nurseryman finds it cheaper to lease such land as he requires instead of owning it.

THERE are reported to be some enormous blocks of two-year apple trees in the finest of condition at Shenandoah, Ia.

J. T. ECCLES has sold his property at Beaumont, Tex., and bought land just outside of town, where he will proceed to enlarge his nursery business.

T. V. MUNSON, of Denison, Tex., is to present a paper on the hardiness of grapes before the International Conference on Plant Hardiness and Acclimatization at New York, October 1 to 3.

NINETY-TWO nurseries have been inspected in Oklahoma and reported free from infections and disease, and licenses will be issued by the board of agriculture. There are thirteen nurseries in Indian Territory which will come under the Oklahoma law this fall if the constitution is approved.

MARKETING NURSERY STOCK.

[A paper by C. J. Maloy, of Ellwanger & Barry, read at the Detroit meeting of the American Association of Nurserymen.]

Marketing is by far the most important operation connected with our business, because we may grow as much stock as we please, but if we cannot find a market for it, our efforts will all be in vain.

Nursery stock is sold at retail by means of a catalogue, dealing direct with the customer. This is also known as a mail order trade. It is probably the most satisfactory way to dispose of your stock if you can get enough orders. To develop such a trade, the first thing necessary is to advertise in such papers or magazines as in your judgment will bring you the most returns, and these returns are mainly used to distribute your catalogue, which is the most necessary adjunct in a business of this kind. A well arranged, comprehensive catalogue is necessary. The descriptions should be concise—not overdrawn; the prices should be given for each article; in fact, it should be made as plain and clear as it is possible to do, because this catalogue really is to act as a salesman and from it you must expect to get your orders. Prices should be reasonable, according to the quality of stock furnished. Of course, the expense of all this will be considerable, but it is the only way in which a business of this kind can be worked up.

Nursery stock is also sold at retail through agents, and this has now assumed large proportions in this country, but I do not feel competent to give advice on this branch of the business.

The wholesale branch of the nursery business is larger now than ever before. This is particularly true of fruit trees shipped from the west, as well as from the nurseries at Dansville, Geneva and Rochester. The demand for ornamental trees and shrubs in wholesale quantities was, I think, greater the last spring than ever.

FOR FALL PLANTING

GILBERT COSTICH, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Mention The Review when you write.

While there were immense quantities of both fruit and ornamental trees and shrubs shipped, the question arises whether we have received the prices we should, considering the increase in the cost of production. This has always been a disputed question, and I have spoken of it before at these meetings. It seems to me that the nurseryman is not receiving anywhere near what he ought for his product, as compared with prices in other lines of trade. We go on year after year growing immense stocks of this, that and the other, and then enter into competition with one another in order to dispose of these goods, at ruinously low prices. As a matter of fact, we are selling goods today at the same prices, and in some cases less, than we did ten years ago, when we know that the cost of growing has increased at least fifty per cent, to say nothing of the losses by drought, frost and hail.

There is one remedy I would like to see applied, which I believe would, in a measure, relieve this condition, and that is to avoid as much as possible the danger of overplanting. It is true that this is a large country, but there is a demand only for a certain quantity. It may vary some one year with another, but you know pretty well what the average demand is. Now, if you plant more than what your market demands, you are creating a surplus which, if you sell it at all, must invariably be sold at a loss.

Then again, prices at which surplus at regular prices, and they will form the habit of waiting until these surplus lists appear before placing their orders. So I say that overplanting creates a surplus which, if disposed of at the usual low prices of surplus lists, is a great detriment to the following year's business. It is a hard thing to do, but in the long run, would it not be more profitable to burn the stock left over? Would it not have a tendency to stop the evil of overplanting, which is really one of the principal causes of low prices?

I think it is also a mistake for nurserymen to sell roses and shrubs to department stores, which retail them in most cases at below cost merely to bring trade for other things to the store. It cannot help but have a depressing effect upon this branch of the business, because if you ask a fair price for a rose plant, people who have no idea of the real cost of such things will tell you that they can be bought at much less at department stores.

In marketing nursery stock, too, it must be borne in mind that one of the principal essentials is to know that the stock you are selling is genuine; that is, true to name. This is an important thing to consider, because it really means the foundation of your business, your reputation. If you are not careful to preserve that, your business is bound to suffer; in fact, it cannot exist for any great length of time.

The grading of nursery stock is another important item, and to which more attention should be given. There should be a uniform grade established which will apply to all sections of the country. For example, a silver maple or American elm eight feet ten inches in height should have a given caliper or diameter at say six inches above the ground.

There may be other things to consider in the marketing of nursery stock, but I have tried to touch on some of the principal ones.

EVERGREENS.

The demand for fairly large specimens of Colorado blue spruce is constantly increasing—increasing to such an extent, in fact, that specimen plants from five feet up are hard to obtain in some parts of the country.

When the necessity arises for the moving of large evergreens, trees twenty feet high and over, it will be well to have arrangements made for the work to be done in winter, when frost will permit a solid ball of earth of generous dimensions to be taken with every tree. It is extremely hazardous work, the moving of evergreens of such dimensions at any other time of the year, because there may occur mishaps which would cause the balls to get broken, with the almost inevitable result of dead trees in spring.

There is no denying the fact that for serviceable qualities, when planted in the northern states, there are few if any evergreens, capable of attaining a large size, that equal the white spruce. This tree will live and thrive in almost every kind of soil and location. It will grow up into a beautiful and shapely specimen when planted singly in a somewhat sheltered situation inland. When planted in large or small groups near the seashore, they do remarkably well. They take so kindly to crowding that by the time they show signs of being individually disfigured, in consequence of being too closely planted, they will be so hardened that judicious thinning will work no injury to their future success.

The Market.

Business shows a gradual improvement. A majority of the town people have returned from the various country places and things are assuming a more lively aspect. The weather continues cool, favoring the growers and retailers alike. Flowers are not overplentiful, however, with the exception of asters, and they are still seen in great profusion. The demand for them has not been quite as good this year as formerly and it is doubtful if there will be as large an acreage planted next year as there has been previously. Sweet peas are short of stem and the cooler weather is having the effect of making the blooms fall to pieces easily. Some long-stemmed flowers are shown from interior places, but those grown in this neighborhood have apparently outlived their usefulness.

Indoor carnations are more plentiful and, although the stems are short on many kinds, the blooms are of good quality throughout. The prices are a shade higher than those quoted a couple of weeks ago. Roses are scarce and will continue so for a considerable time. The best Maids, Testouts and Brides cost the retailers from 75 cents to $1 per dozen, while short-stemmed stock can be had at about half that price.

Japanese lilies have held the market for several weeks, at good prices, and are now becoming scarcer. Valley is in fair supply, but moves slowly. Other kinds of outdoor stock are not in much demand and but little money has been made on them this season. Smilax is more plentiful and is in fair demand.

Various Notes.

W. S. Jesserun, representing the Bombay Reed Manufacturing Co., is in town. He reports splendid business for his firm all along the coast.

Wm. Cox, of the Cox Seed Co., has returned from a trip to Oregon and Washington. Thomas Cox, manager of the same firm, will depart on an eastern trip in a few days. He contemplates being absent from California for several months.

John Vallance, of C. C. Morse & Co., has returned from a visit to the northern part of the state.

W. W. Saunders has opened a store for baskets, moss and florists' supplies under the Chamber of Commerce building, Oakland. G.

sists chiefly of asters, gladioli, Lilium auratum and L. speciosum. Asters never were finer than now, and a beautiful rain a week ago means that we may expect a continuous supply of them until the frost comes.

The sales from a new crop of roses again remind us that they can always command first recognition in popularity.

A half holiday on Labor day gave us an opportunity to make a few social calls among the growers, so we greased up the automobile and started for Sellwood. Mr. Sibson had told us that he had something of interest to show us and we were not disappointed. Few changes were noticed in the greenhouses, as last year's rose stock was carried over, and we certainly think that Mr. Sibson did right. Everything under glass showed a clean, healthy growth. Mr. Sibson is rapidly preparing to cater to a large wholesale trade. He was most enthusiastic over the merits of Kate Moulton and Liberty and is cutting a large crop of each. This establishment is just what we need in the northwest.

of Mt. Tabor. This firm has added one house and made other improvements which betoken progress and prosperity. Here, too, everything shows the best of care and it is one of the leading retail places.

Crossing over to L. G. Pfunder's, we were told that the veteran was absent, having been invited to deliver an address before the Federated Trade Unions on the "Social and Moral Obligations of the Laboring Man." We left, wishing that we, too, owned such a valuable piece of property.

Around the corner appears the fine range of houses owned by William Martin, formerly Martin & Forbes. Some 20,000 feet of glass have been added here this season, another move in the right direction. Close attention to business on the part of the employer, with plenty of competent help, accounts for the constant productiveness of this establishment.

A mile south of here, in a popular growing suburb, Clarke Bros. are going right ahead. To allow for further expansion they fenced in a few adjoining acres and have increased their glass area by 25,000 feet. This is the greatest increase for any one firm and their business demands it. The entire place has received a complete overhauling and is all under the personal supervision of A. J. Clarke. H. J. M.

SALINE WATER FOR FLOWERS.

In digging a well for some new greenhouses we struck water that is strong with magnesia. The water is soft and seems to be suitable for drinking. Do you think it will harm the flowers?

W. C. H.

Saline waters are those, the predominant properties of which depend upon saline impregnation. The salts most usually present are the sulphates and carbonates of sodium, calcium and magnesium; in the latter case the name magnesian is given to them. This element, magnesium, in some form or other is universally disseminated throughout the whole of the earth's crust. This accounts for traces of magnesia in the ashes of all plants and animals, and for its presence in almost all natural waters.

If this is the only salt in the water, and the impregnation is not too strong, there is no danger in using it either for irrigation or syringing. A safe plan would be to expose it to sunlight for some time before using it for syringing.

on it during the cold weather. Select a piece of ground with a slight slope; the aspect is immaterial. Transplant the pansies, either into beds or regular nursery rows. After the ground is hard frozen, say about the first week in December, spread a light coating of coarse meadow hay (that from salt marshes is often used) or straw which has been used for bedding and from which the manure has been shaken out, broadcast over the plants. In order to prevent this covering from being blown away, lay some pine boughs, pea brush or corn stalks over it. Do not remove this covering too early, for the greatest injury to pansies comes in March, with the alternate freezing and thawing, which heaves the plants from the ground.

Be sure not to put on the protection until the ground is frozen; too early covering would be injurious. Remember also that a heavy coating of mulch is not wanted. The idea is to protect the plants from the sun, which harms them more late in the winter than the frost, and not to keep them warm. Leaves make a good mulching, but blow away too easily.

Of course you can winter pansies well in coldframes if you have any such to NEWPORT, R. I.

Current Comment.

President Butterson, of the Newport Horticultural Society, has appointed Alex MacLellan, John T. Allan and Daniel Coughlin judges for the coming exhibition.

James Robertson, gardener for Mrs. T. O. Richardson, took second prize for the best twelve cactus dahlias at the recent show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, in Boston.

Although with the close of the horse show the season is now noticeably on the wane, there is still quite a good deal doing. There are dinners nearly every evening and the florists on the avenue are getting the bulk of the decorations to do, because most of those now entertaining have no greenhouses of their own.

Last week one of the biggest affairs of the season took place at Oakland Farm, in Portsmouth, where Alfred Vanderbilt puts up when in Rhode Island. This event was at first styled a luncheon, but it eventually resolved itself into a garden party in addition. Gibson Bros. had charge of the floral decorations, which were on a lavish scale.

Joseph Leikens had a large decoration at J. B. Hagin's residence a few days ago.

Wadley & Smythe are unable to procure in Newport or vicinity anything like the number of cattleyas they require in their business in Newport.

The old Fadden store, on Bellevue avenue, where flowers and plants were sold summer and winter for fifty years or more, was the scene of a serious conflagration Tuesday evening, September 3. The interior and contents were badly burned and damaged; insurance partial.

Mrs. A. T. Herrington and two daughters are visiting Mr. and Mrs. William Jones, on Maher court.

Charles W. Cowles, gardener for G. C. Knight, Jr., is standing floods of congratulations with remarkable fortitude—another daughter.

Melons of large size and good quality are bringing extraordinarily high prices here now. Five dollars is a common price to ask and receive for one of these melons. They are imported from Canada. R. R.

JOLIET, ILL.—The Illinois State Florists' Association, incorporated, has certified to the secretary of state a change in location from Springfield to Joliet. The next annual convention will be held at Joliet in February.

The Market.

Business has certainly had its ups and downs. One day there would be quite a rush and the next there would be nothing doing. Even the general average did not amount to much, as the majority were small orders which did not count up fast. Roses are coming in much more heavily, and the cool nights which we have been having lately have improved the quality a great deal. Beauties are still in good supply, of good quality and selling well. Bride holds the lead as a seller, though. Carnations are coming a little stronger, but still most of them are from the field and of poor quality. They sell well, even at that. Asters are plentiful still, but they are selling much better and the prospects are for higher prices this week. The better grades sell first-class. There are still great quantities of gladioli and they are not selling much better than they have been. Only those of the best quality bring anything like a fair price. Dahlias do not sell at all well, but it is expected that they will do better as soon as the aster crop thins out a little. Lilies of all kinds are good property. Good smilax is scarce, but other green goods are equal to the demand.

NOVELTIES FOR 1908

HARVARD—Glowing crimson (the real Harvard color). This variety will take the place of all other crimsons, as it is very free and the blooms are of the finest as to size and quality. It is a very rapid grower and the habit is ideal. Rooted Cuttings, $12.00 per 100, $100.00 per 1000.

FAUST—A brilliant scarlet. This variety will replace all of the commercial varieties of this color, owing to its extreme productiveness, many plants last December having 20 buds and blooms to the plant. A fine one for the Xmas trade. Rooted Cuttings, $6.00 per 100, $50.00 per 1000.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Little complaint was offered among the retailers last week. Stock of nearly all kinds is plentiful and moved fairly well. The cool breezes of fall have at last made their appearance and shortly those who are spending their time away from home will be arriving in the city, and naturally business will once more go ahead.

Stock inside is in every way encouraging. Roses and carnations are looking exceedingly fine. There is little mildew or stem-rot. Many of our growers will have a surplus of carnation plants. Mums are in elegant shape. Asparagus and smilax are up to the usual condition. Violets are in fine condition; single varieties will be grown more extensively than the double. Roses are arriving more regularly and the carnations are looking better and coming in slowly, selling well. Gladioli are not so heavy in supply as in the last few weeks. Dahlias are coming in much heavier and find good sale at fair prices. Asters are still a glut, but are moving fairly well, considering the large quantity on the market.

Various Notes.

The Maryland state fair, held at Timonium, Md., was a great success, and many gardeners and florists attended. The farmers and private gardeners made a display of their products, but I regret to say I did not see a plant or flower from our florists. Among those who exhibited were Griffith & Turner Co. and J. Bolgiano & Son.

Tischinger Bros. are again in the market with a fine line of house plants.

W. G. Atkinson, Glyndon, Md., has four acres of gladioli in bloom. Mr. Atkinson is a member of one of our large shipping firms.

G. H. Rhodes, Arlington, is cutting some extra fine asters and sweet peas.

The amount of work at the range of houses of Chas. Cook, on West Mosher street extended, has compelled Mrs. Cook to look after the city market trade.

J. L. T.

ORANGE, N. J.—The meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society held September 6 was called to distribute the schedules of the forthcoming dahlia show, October 4. There were but six exhibits and a scattering of members.

BEATRICE, NEB.—At the state fair at Lincoln the Dole Floral Co. was awarded nineteen first, second and third premiums and the premiums had a total cash value of $97. The Dole exhibit consisted of two carloads of stock.

Grand New Double Daisy

A sport from that great money-making single variety, QUEEN ALEXANDRA, that everybody grows to a good profit. You can do better with this. The flowers are large, averaging three inches in diameter, and none of the flowers comes single at any time of the year. It blooms freely, either under glass or outdoors. Young stock, out of 2½-inch pots, ready for delivery January 1, $25.00 per 100.

The Market.

The flower stores about the city are assuming an air of business again, after the long quiet spell. Nearly all the stores have received a general overhauling and painting. Several large weddings are already booked for the next week, besides numerous small ones. The fad for June weddings seems to have changed around to fall.

Stock remains about the same. Some fine asters are arriving daily in large lots. Many are used, but hundreds are going to waste as well. There are really no good flowers on the market at present with which to do fine work. Carnations are again on the market; of course the flowers are still small, but of a nice, clear color. Sweet peas suffered severely from the long drought, and the rain of the last few days came almost too late to do any good. Greens are quite plentiful.

Various Notes.

George Rackham has certainly been having his share of the world's troubles the last year. Some six weeks ago Mr. Rackham injured his knee and he has been laid up more or less ever since; at present he has to rely on the use of a pair of crutches.

There is no doubt but that Morris Wolf will have to go back to selling flowers again, as his venture as a summer resort promoter has proved a failure. What has been known for the last two seasons as Wolf's park was placed in the hands of a receiver several weeks ago, with a heavy list on the loss side of the books.

Albert Pochelon has gone back on the Detroit clothiers, it seems. On the recent eastern trip he bought a complete new outfit of clothes in Philadelphia, from his head down to the soles of his feet.

Miss Mae Wright, for several years in the employ of B. Schroeter, has given up her position. She is leaving the city for Spokane, Wash.

Hammond's paint is being used to re-decorate the whole interior of the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange. H. S.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.—Wm. Henry Evans has returned from a month's trip in the east.

FREDONIA, KAN.—Lloyd C. Bunch says the weather has been very dry in this neighborhood all summer. He is building a house 24x84 feet, for vegetables.

OCONOMOWOC, WIS.—Fred Pabst, of Milwaukee, is building two greenhouses 36x100 at his summer place at Oconomowoc Lake. The Moninger Co., Chicago, is supplying the material. Albert B. Havrane is Mr. Pabst's gardener.

 successful; learn and do it likewise.

ARAUCARIAS our specialty. Watch us grow.

1907 is our 12th anniversary in a successful career in the importation, growing and shipping of those well-known and well admired evergreen decorative plants.

The Araucaria Excelsa, Robusta, Compacta and Excelsa Glauca. Our importation this spring, 1907, has swollen up to the enormous amount of 6000. More are coming on with the azaleas, Sept. and Oct. By buying now your plants will grow into money 100 per cent in 2 or 3 months. Next in rank come our Nephrolepis or Ferns, of which we have only the best selling varieties. A big lot of Boston, Elegantissima, Whitmani and Scottii. Have 3 large houses full in all salable sizes; all pot-grown, not bench grown. Our ferns are not forced or grown in shady houses, but were grown in sunny houses; ventilators open day and night. Such treatment makes hardy, stiff fronds and strong, stout plants. Can be shipped 5,000 miles without injury in transportation.

Now is the best time to ship; as you can ship safely by freight.

Cocos Weddelliana—(Palm) 3-in. pots, 12, 15, 18 in. high, 15c, 18c, 20c each.

The American Carnation.

By C. W. WARD. Invaluable to the carnation grower. All departments of the business are treated in a thoroughly practical manner. This book is the work of a careful, studious grower of ripe experience. Fully illustrated. $3.50

The Florists' Manual.

By WILLIAM SCOTT. Covers the whole field of commercial floriculture. Articles are arranged alphabetically so that reference is quick and easy. It tells you just what you want to know in just the way you want to be told. $5.00

The Pruning Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. This is the first American work exclusively devoted to pruning. It differs from most other treatises on this subject in that the author takes particular pains to explain the principles of each operation in every detail. Specific advice is given on the pruning of the various kinds of fruits and ornamental trees, shrubs and hedges. Considerable space is devoted to the pruning and training of grape vines, both American and foreign. Cloth. 530 pages. Illustrated. $1.50

Greenhouse Heating.

HOT WATER COIL.

Would you kindly tell me how large a coil I will need to heat from 1,800 to 2,000 lineal feet of 2-inch pipe? What size of pipe, and how many lineal feet of it, will be required to make such a coil?
A. B. C.

I take it from what you say that you desire to construct a hot water heater out of pipe and make it capable of heating 2,000 lineal feet of 2-inch pipe. If such a coil were to be constructed from 2-inch pipe it should contain 250 lineal feet of 2-inch pipe. If built from 1½-inch pipe, 320 lineal feet of pipe will be needed in its construction.
L. C. C.

PAINTING STEAM PIPES.

We notice in a recent issue of the REVIEW an article on painting steam pipes, and would like to ask your advice in this connection. About a week ago, during the absence of the superintendent, one of our men gave the steam pipes in some of our rose houses a coat of paint made of white lead and oil. Do you think that this will prove injurious to the plants?
C. F.

There is no danger to roses from the fumes arising from white lead and oil. The oil, however, gives off a disagreeable smell when heated, and the white lead will prevent proper radiation. If the coat of paint is not heavy, there may be little difference in the radiation, but all paints with a heavy body, when used on steam pipes, retard the dispersion of heat.
RIBES.

PIPING IN NEW MEXICO.

We are sending you under separate cover plans of our heating system, which is not satisfactory, and wish you would give us some directions as to its improvement. We have the Wilks No. 30 hot water boiler. The expansion tank, which has a capacity of ten gallons, is two feet above the highest point of the flow pipe and eight feet above the boiler.

The fault we find with the system is the slow circulation of water in the pipes, as it takes two hours or more to get the heat returned to the boiler. We are using hard coal and, as it costs from $16 to $23 per ton, we do not like to waste much of it if we can be informed how to get a better circulation. Would it be an improvement if the pipe of the expansion tank were connected to the main return near the boiler?

F. O. S.

Your houses have almost the exact radiation for a temperature of from 60 to 65 degrees in New Mexican climate, providing the plan sent is drawn to the ordinary architectural scale of one-quarter inch to the foot. The chief criticism I would make of the system is in regard to the location of the boiler and the manner of carrying the flow pipes. If possible I should cut out the loop in the riser in the house adjacent to the boiler-room. Run the riser direct from the boiler to the main riser through this house; cut out the expansion tank at this point. This will make the distance traveled by the water about twenty-five feet less in this house. The 88-foot house, which stands at right angles to the smaller one, I should handle as follows: Use all pipes now in the house as returns and carry the main riser from the point where it enters the house to a point under the ridge; there divide it into two 2½-inch pipes, one going to the north and one to the south end of this house, and there divide to enter each of the coils under the benches, as returns. This arrangement will give you a somewhat quicker flow than you now get. The next thing is to connect the expansion tank to the main return within twelve inches of where it enters the boiler, and by the use of a ¾-inch pipe carry it eighteen or twenty feet above the highest point in the system; or, if you have an elevated tank for supply, make direct connections with it, provided it is not over twenty or thirty feet above the ground. These modifications, if your boiler has a rated capacity of 1,500 feet, should give satisfaction.

PIPING IN MAINE.

I have a three-quarter-span house, 20x50 feet, running east and west, with a boiler-room at the east end of the house. I have a Mercer boiler, No. 1, with nine sections. Our winter temperature here ranges from above zero to 15 degrees below and occasionally 20 degrees below. I have been heating with hot water and wish to continue to do so. I now have four 2-inch flows and ten 2-inch returns. My north flow has three 2-inch returns, suspended on the north wall. My south flow has three 2-inch returns, suspended on the south wall. The other two flows have each two 2-inch returns under the center benches.

Now, this arrangement does the heating very well, but the four flows run overhead and I desire to get them out of the way and I wish to know if one 3-inch flow, up under the ridge, will do the work as well or better. Each set of returns enters the boiler-room in one 2-inch pipe, making four 2-inch returns as they enter the boiler. These I cannot change, as the boiler is tapped for 2-inch pipe only on the returns, while it is tapped for four 2-inch flows and one 3-inch flow. If I can use one 3-inch flow for all and run it under the ridge, will it be all right for me to put in a tee about three feet and a half from the west end of the house and run a pipe diagonally to the west end of the two circulations, under the middle benches, and then at the west end of the house put in an elbow and

HOT WATER COIL.

Would you kindly tell me how large a coil I will need to heat from 1,800 to 2,000 lineal feet of 2-inch pipe? What size of pipe, and how many lineal feet of it, will be required to make such a coil? A. B. C.

I take it from what you say that you desire to construct a hot water heater out of pipe and make it capable of heating 2,000 lineal feet of 2-inch pipe. If such a coil were to be constructed from 2-inch pipe it should contain 250 lineal feet of 2-inch pipe. If built from 1½-inch pipe, 320 lineal feet of pipe will be needed in its construction. L. C. PAINTING STEAM PIPES.

We notice in a recent issue of the REVIEW an article on painting steam pipes, and would like to ask your advice in this connection. About a week ago, during the absence of the superintendent, one of our men gave the steam pipes in some of our rose houses a coat of paint made of white lead and oil. Do you think that this will prove injurious to the plants? C. F.

There is no danger to roses from the fumes arising from white lead and oil. The oil, however, gives off a disagreeable smell when heated, and the white lead will prevent proper radiation. If the coat of paint is not heavy, there may be little difference in the radiation, but all paints with a heavy body, when used on steam pipes, retard the dispersion of heat. RIBES.

PIPING IN NEW MEXICO.

We are sending you under separate cover plans of our heating system, which is not satisfactory, and wish you would give us some directions as to its improvement. We have the Wilks No. 30 hot water boiler. The expansion tank, which has a capacity of ten gallons, is two feet above the highest point of the flow pipe and eight feet above the boiler.

The fault we find with the system is the slow circulation of water in the pipes, as it takes two hours or more to get the heat returned to the boiler. We are using hard coal and, as it costs from $16 to $23 per ton, we do not like to waste much of it if we can be informed how to get a better circulation. Would it be an improvement if the pipe of the expansion tank were connected to the main return near the boiler? F. O. S.

Your houses have almost the exact radiation for a temperature of from 60 to 65 degrees in New Mexican climate, providing the plan sent is drawn to the ordinary architectural scale of one-quarter inch to the foot. The chief criticism I would make of the system is in regard to the location of the boiler and the manner of carrying the flow pipes. If possible I should cut out the loop in the riser in the house adjacent to the boiler-room. Run the riser direct from the boiler to the main riser through this house; cut out the expansion tank at this point. This will make the distance traveled by the water about twenty-five feet less in this house. The 88-foot house, which stands at right angles to the smaller one, I should handle as follows: Use all pipes now in the house as returns and carry the main riser from the point where it enters the house to a point under the ridge;

there divide it into two 2½-inch pipes, one going to the north and one to the south end of this house, and there divide to enter each of the coils under the benches, as returns. This arrangement will give you a somewhat quicker flow than you now get. The next thing is to connect the expansion tank to the main return within twelve inches of where it enters the boiler, and by the use of a ¾-inch pipe carry it eighteen or twenty feet above the highest point in the system; or, if you have an elevated tank for supply, make direct connections with it, provided it is not over twenty or thirty feet above the ground. These modifications, if your boiler has a rated capacity of 1,500 feet, should give satisfaction.

You can make the change as indicated, but it will be well for you to use the four 2-inch pipes now serving as flows for returns, place them either on the side walls or under the benches and run the 3-inch riser under the ridge of the house, as suggested. You can dispense with one of the four pipes if you choose, but if you throw out four 2-inch pipes and install only one 3-inch flow you will reduce the radiation somewhat, which is not desirable, as you now have just about the right amount for a temperature of 60 degrees.

The Market.

The cut flower trade continues about the same as usual. The summer dullness is still on and there is not much doing, outside of funeral work, which calls for plenty of short stuff. The supply of flowers is about equal to the demand. Some nice asters are coming in. Sweet peas are still to be seen, but they have not done as well as in other years, owing to the continued dry weather here. Outside of these, there are plenty of outdoor annuals, etc., useful for bouquet making. A good many of the growers have finished planting their young carnation stock in the houses. The plants look healthy enough, but are small as compared with other years. This, again, is due to the dry weather. This has been the driest summer for a number of years. Many of the wells in this section are dried up.

The Carnival Flower Show.

The last week of August was Carnival or Old Home week. The mills were all shut down and it was a gala time. The Carnival flower show was a great success. It was open August 27 to 29, and for these three days a record-breaking attendance was reported. The show was held under the auspices of the New Bedford Horticultural Society. Most of the prizes in the dahlia classes were captured by Mrs. H. A. Jahn, who is one of the principal local growers of dahlias. H. H. Rogers was the winner of several first prizes in the general flower display and for plants.

Various Notes.

E. Y. Pierce, on Cottage street, has a house of Boston Market which he has been picking from all summer. He reports an excellent demand for flowers all through the warm season. He has just finished his new boiler-pit, which is all of concrete, the best Portland cement having been used in its construction. Everything looks well at this place.

USEFUL WHITE SUMMER FLOWERS

GOOD STOCK FOR CUTTING.

While the demand for cut flowers slackens off heavily during the hot months, there is always some call for suitable white flowers for funeral and other work. While gladioli, asters, stocks and sweet peas are, in addition to the omnipresent roses and carnations, those mostly met with on the market, there are many other flowers worthy of cultivation, especially by those who do a funeral retail trade. Now is the time to plan and prepare for the summer of 1908. As practically all are hardy which I will name, and of easy culture, any florist can, with little expense, plant a batch of each.

Phlox Miss Lingard.

Phlox Miss Lingard is a splendid variety, in my estimation the finest of all the perennial phloxes. It belongs to the suffruticosa section. The leaves are of a shining green color and the flowers almost pure white, with a delicate pink eye. The spikes grow from twenty-four to thirty inches in height and in some seasons we have cut them as early as the first week in June. If restricted to one phlox, my choice would be Miss Lingard. In the whole decussata or paniculata section there is not a variety to equal it for cutting or mass bedding. A good feature about it is that while the main crop may come in during July, the plants keep throwing up more flowering shoots and give a persistent crop of flowers until fall. No other phlox lasts give splendid spikes the following June and July.

Chrysanthemum Leucanthemum Hybridum.

The common name of Chrysanthemum leucanthemum hybridum is the Shasta daisy and it is one of the few valuable plants sent out by Luther Burbank. There are now a number of named varieties of it, but a good selection may be secured by saving seeds in early summer are four inches in diameter in the best types and well adapted for cutting. In addition to its value for cutting, the Shasta daisy is an effective plant for massing in borders. Plants are readily propagated by division of the root as well as from seed.

Phlox Miss Lingard.

Lilium Candidum.

Lilium candidum is easily the best of all hardy garden lilies. Unfortunately, the disease which has been so rife on outdoor stock has greatly restricted its culture. In many old gardens, however, glorious masses of it, undisturbed for years, are to be met with.

The Madonna or Annunciation lily, as it is commonly called, is in season durso well in water, while it is unequalled for funeral work.

Propagation by cuttings taken off either in fall or spring, which can be kept over winter in a coldframe, is easy. Those propagated in early October will and saving the finest plants which bloom the following summer. The flowering time is usually from the beginning to the end of July, but after cutting down the first crop a good many will be produced later in the season. The flowers ing the last days of June and the first half of July. Unlike the majority of lilies, it needs an open, sunny location and requires planting only four to five inches deep. The new bulbs usually arrive in America in late summer or early in the autumn and should be planted as soon as they arrive, as they start to root and form a rosette of leaves at once. Some growers advocate planting the bulbs on their sides. This is entirely unnecessary. I have never known them to decay when planted in the regulation manner.

There are two types of the pure-white, fragrant, garden lily. One is represented by large bulbs, with narrow scales. I have seen bulbs almost cover the top of a 6-inch pot. These produce narrow leaves and short, thin spikes, with three to five flowers each, which have small flowers with narrow petals. This is the variety usually seen in America at Easter and it is almost worthless.

The tall, broad-petaled type has smaller but heavier bulbs, with broader scales. The leaves are wider and the flower-stalks stout and producing eight to ten flowers, not infrequently two or three spikes coming from a single large bulb.

A thin coating of leaves or straw, which should be removed early in April, is all the protection this lily requires.

Achillea Ptarmica The Pearl.

That popular florists' flower, Achillea ptarmica The Pearl, is almost too well known to require any mention. It is one of the most popular herbaceous plants grown, and the florist who has need of white flowers in summer for design work, is badly off without it. Once planted, it will take care of itself, as it spreads with surprising rapidity. It will be necessary to give it a bed where it will not encroach on other plants, and to replant every second or third year to keep it in place. While double flowers are produced on seedlings, a great many are single and semi-double. Being so nized. There is, however, a prevalent idea that they are not suitable for the hardy garden, being somewhat tender. I have always found them as ironclad as the German or Japanese types, needing only the lightest protection in winter. For outdoor culture the bulbs should not be planted before the beginning of November, to prevent growths appearing above the ground before freezing-up weather. I have, however, frequently seen attention from those who grow for their own retail trade.

Clematis Recta.

Clematis recta is one of the most desirable hardy perennials blooming in June and early July, attaining a height of four feet and producing large panicles of white, fragrant flowers similar to those borne on the well-known climbing C. paniculata. There is also a double form which produces erect umbels of fine white flowers, excellent for floral work. Propagation by division of the roots in fall can be effected. The plants resent frequent removals and flower but sparsely the summer after being transplanted. A little support is needed before the flowers open, or high winds and rains will break down the clumps.

C. W.

UP-TO-DATE METHODS.

[A paper by T. W. Duggan, of Brampton, Ont., read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, in convention at London, Ont., August 28, 1907, continued from the Review of September 12.]

Promptness.

Another requisite that is exceedingly important is promptness. The cut flower business calls for quick action, and there must be no loafing or dilatory conduct in the way an order is handled. The trade is always a quick one, and must be handled with alacrity. An order that is expected tomorrow morning ought to arrive then, so far as we are concerned. Our driver, for instance, who has the important position of taking our consignments to every express train that leaves the town, is paid so much per week and a bonus every week that trains are not missed, and I might say that not more than twice in a year is a bonus missed. Our head shipper, too, who has charge of the orders, and has to use a great deal of head work in very quick time, is paid a inexpensive, it is best to buy some roots and plant in September or October.

Gladiolus Nanus Mathilda.

Gladiolus nanus Mathilda is not strictly a hardy plant, although it may be treated as such. Better results are, however, to be had by growing it in flats and keeping quite cold, placing the flats outdoors about the middle of April and keeping them well supplied with water. Boxes 12x24 inches and containing three inches of soil will hold seventy-five bulbs and these will average two spikes each.

While all the forms of Gladiolus nanus are excellent, this variety, which is pure white with a faint suffusion of lavender, is far superior to G. Colvillei The Bride, usually grown by florists in quantity. The spikes have a graceful droop and the flowers are double the size of those produced on The Bride. The flowers are specially valuable at Memorial day and can be kept back, if desired, until the middle of July. The low price of this fine gladiolus should cause more florists to take it in hand.

Delphinium Chinensis Alba.

The Chinese larkspurs, both blue and white, are well adapted for cutting. While the deep blue form is usually seen, there is a pure white variety well worth cultivating. Propagation is easy, by seeds, which may be sown any time from March to September and, when sufficiently large to handle, be transplanted into nursery rows. Spring sown seedlings will flower the same year and make strong plants the succeeding year. In addition to being useful for cutting, the Chinese larkspurs can be dotted among the taller growing delphiniums, or are telling in masses by themselves. The flowering season is from July until frost.

Iris Hispanica.

The merits of the Spanish iris for forcing are being more and more recogshoots several inches high about Thanksgiving, and the most severe frosts never seemed to injure them. The bulbs make beautiful effects in irregular mass plantings, using several hundred bulbs in each. For cutting they are splendid and, flowering, as they do, during June in the open, they are of special value for weddings and graduation exercises. The bulbs will flower for more than one year.

Achillea Ptarmica The Pearl.

In fact, I had this season one large clump which flowered finely for the fourth season.

Mont Blanc is a tall-growing, pure-white variety. My favorite, however, is Louise, a delicate blue color, which will almost pass for white. The Spanish irises are so inexpensive and so valuable for cutting that they deserve increased bonus for satisfactory and prompt handling of orders. So rapid has the system become that at times we have received a telephone message, packed two boxes and reached the railway station in time for the express train, nearly half a mile away, in so much less than five minutes that if I were to tell you exactly you might doubt the statement.

Iris Hispanica Mont Blanc.

Division of Responsibility.

Before passing this item of capacity I might say that I have found it of great benefit to divide the responsibilities of work in the greenhouses, and we have a general foreman, under whom are assistant foremen, one for each department—one for engineering work, one for steam fitting, two for roses, one for carnations, one for chrysanthemums, one for valley and orchids, and so on in the different departments. These men are in immediate contact with the other members of the departments, who are advised by them. When the management, or the foreman, or one of the assistant foremen, desires to offer any suggestions—and such are always courted—or to make any changes in plans, a cabinet meeting is held by the manager, with the foreman and his assistant foreman in consultation, and at intervals meetings are held for the discussion of things that pertain to the estate, in this way not only showing confidence in these men but bringing about results that are often beneficial. These men are specially considered and remunerated at the end of the year, and in instances where suggestions have been made by growers not holding a special position, where the estate manifestly benefited by the thought, immediate recognition was given, and a knowledge of these facts is bound to give valuable help to the management.

Advertising.

As to advertising, no rule can be laid down for any one business. We have never done much advertising, because most of the time the demand for our goods has been greater than the supply, but where we have had stock to offer in unlimited quantities we believe it has paid us to advertise in the trade journals, and I refer, of course, specially to our own Canadian journal, which is improving so much in every respect and ought to be patronized. There can be no question about the advantage of advertising if you have stock that ought to be sold and there is any uncertainty as to the demand. Advertisements should be honest, fresh and to the point, not leaving them in week after week without any change, and in some cases longer than the season of the goods spoken of. For instance, I have seen, in our Canadian trade journal, carnation cuttings advertised when all carnation cuttings had been sold, and the season too late for sale even if any existed. Furthermore, I believe in plain facts being stated and not so-called funny or smart phrases, which to my mind do not appeal to the up-to-date man of business. For instance, I have just received an advertisement with an imitation fishing line and hook, headed "Do You Hook On?" I was not the kind of sucker to be caught by that kind of bait, and at once threw the advertisement into the waste-basket without further reading.

Regulation of Prices.

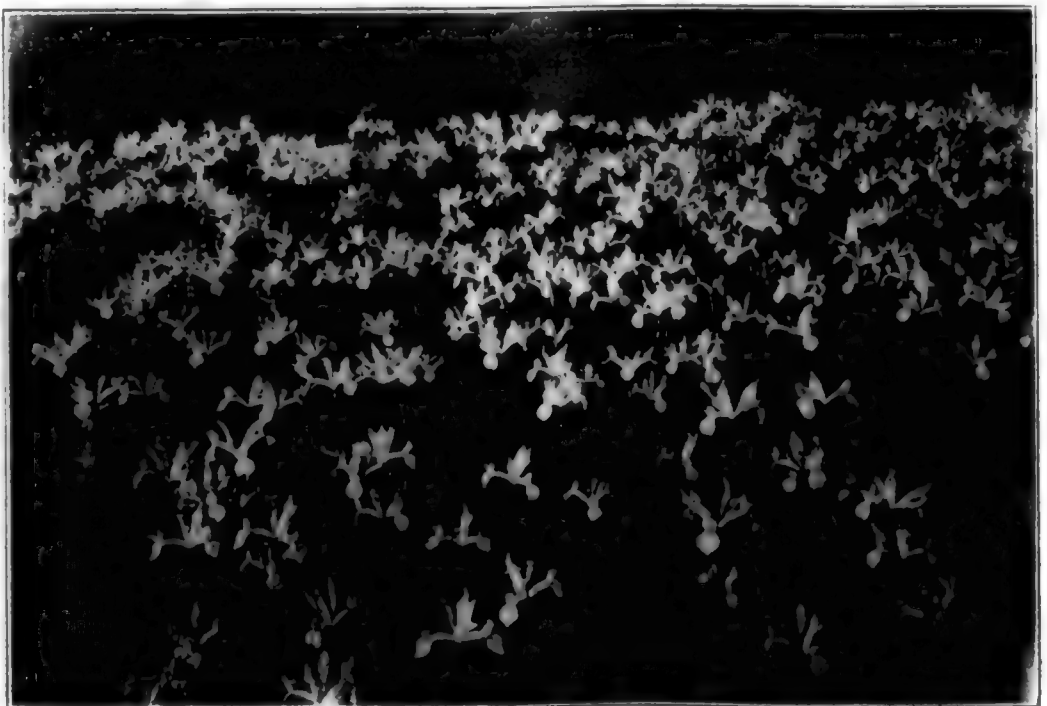

As to prices, this is a tender but vital part of our inward workings. I do not believe in combines, and have never had part in one, but I believe there should be an intelligent arriving, as near as possible, at the cost of an article, and then the selling at a fair price. I may be frank enough to say that it has been our policy to intimate to some other large growers what we consider is a fair price, and to invite their following suit, but we have never endeavored to ascertain what prices they charge, or found fault with their following or rejecting what we consider to be fair and proper. I have, however, an utter contempt for growers who will ask for price lists, intimating their intention to follow suit, and use the prices for cutting on. When a price is fixed as a proper one, and lists sent out, that price ought to be adhered to strictly. It is our policy never to deviate, and one customer is served to the same advantage as the other. I believe that the building up of some large business concerns is largely because of three things: First, careful buying, in our case careful growing; second, one price; third, cash sale.

Prompt Collections.

Now as to the last item, cash. If a man treats his men well, grows good stock, grades properly, packs carefully, is prompt in his delivery, and hands over in good condition to the express company for his customer the order that he has been intrusted with, he is entitled to charge a fair price and to get the money. Undue credit is a curse to business. Fortunately, by degrees it is becoming lessened in every respect, and I believe that the success of large firms, like the T. Eaton Co. and Robert Simpson Co., is due largely to the strictly cash basis, which is the only proper way of transacting business. What right has the grower to pay for his stock, pay his employees for growing, pay for his coal, and be out thousands of dollars each month, with an uncertainty as to whether or not he is going to get it back?

When, at his request, I first looked into the affairs of the late Harry Dale, I found that he neither knew how much he owed nor how much was due him. Although the business then was not more than one-tenth what it is now, there was then on his books, past due for any period from one month to two years, about $8,000, or about six months' business, a great deal of which, of course, was never got in. On suggesting to Mr. Dale the advisability of refusing credit in some instances altogether, and of curtailing credit to even our best customers to a limited time, he objected most strenuously, and said that customers would not buy stock when they were looked to for prompt payment. This necessitated purchasing all his supplies on credit, with all sorts of liabilities floating around. Knowing that this sort of thing was bound to end in one way only, he called in help, as I have stated in a former part of this paper, but still did not care to have his customers drawn on at limited time. However, on insisting upon that course as a proper business one, I subsequently succeeded in extending our C. O. D. list, and in reducing the maximum credit to thirty days from the end of each month. This maximum has since been decreased to the fifteenth day of the month following for payment of each month's account, and our C. O. D. list now is larger than our ledger account. We have also gone so far as to make it a rule with our customers that if a draft for July account, for instance, is not

I have covered all the ground in this crude paper, the first I have ever attempted. The running of a greenhouse concern is not an easy task, by any means. It requires us to be hard at it, and always at it. In fact, during the seven years that I have had the management of this business I have worked harder than during the fourteen years preceding. I have not even been able to take time to visit more than a few of our customers, and believe this is a disadvantage. One's trade customers ought seemed important, and hope that something said, while not new, may stir us up to better efforts and greater success. We do not know it all. There is much to learn all the time, and when we think that we have arrived at perfection it is about time for us to quit. There is something new and something better obtainable all along the line of our production. With eyes open, minds concentrated and energies unflagging, we can yet produce varieties finer than those yet known. We must not be too slow in discarding what has become out-of-date and tiresome to the public, and replacing it with something that appeals to ever varying demands.

Ours is a noble calling. Let us look and act as if we realized it. The clergyman and physician minister to the sick, and so do we, in some instances with greater success. Our mission extends to the sorrowing on one hand, and to joy in every phase on the other hand. In short, we are partners with nature in endeavoring to make life bright and enjoyable by assisting in the production of what is most beautiful and fragrant. The very atmosphere and loveliness of our greenhouses ought to spur us on to efforts that shall not only enrich us to a moderate degree, but shall make for us a good name, which is rather to be chosen than great riches.

PAINT FOR INSIDE WORK.

What is the best white paint for inside iron work in greenhouses? Will ordinary white lead and oil do as well as a graphite paint?
H. F. C.

Having used many grades of white paint for inside work, both on iron and wood, I have always found the best that I could buy was none too good. Good white paint will keep the iron in good shape and, if attended to every two years, will suit the case just as well as graphite. By consulting the pages of the REVIEW you will find paint suited for greenhouse work advertised nearly every week. Don't hesitate over a few cents' difference in cost; get the best there is.

paid on August 15, all shipments must cease until the amount is liquidated.

Long Credits Disastrous.

I believe, gentlemen, that it is in the interests of our trade customers, as well as to our own advantage, to insist upon such prompt payment. If the coal dealer gives long credit to the grower, and the grower gives long credit to the trade customer, and the customer gives longer credit still to his patrons, it brings a long chain of misfortunes to every one concerned.

We ask no more than we give. Everything we buy is paid for in cash, and in no other way could we possibly run our business and give our customers proper value. Our losses during seven years of business have not amounted to one-half of one per cent of our output, and indeed we find our margin of profit so small that we could not afford to do business at the prices we charge on any other basis. Many of our customers, at first not greatly pleased at limited credit, have since told us that we did not gain as much as they by their being compelled to limit their own local credit, and thereby reducing their losses. We believe that no grower is doing his trade customer a kindness in extending a credit beyond the month following delivery of goods. Indeed, some of our very best customers, and best off financially, will not have goods other than on a C. O. D. basis, some others insisting upon paying each week, finding that they will attend to their own collections better when these payments have to be made. The expressman, telegraph man, telephone man, etc., call monthly—why not the florist?

Acquaintance With Customers.

I do not pretend to say or think that to be personally known to the grower, but in an endeavor to build up a large business, which now includes about 750,000 square feet of glass and is nearly five times as large as it was when Mr. Dale was unfortunately taken away, seven years ago, I have found it necessary to devote to the business every possible moment of time, and all my energies, without much relaxation.

In connection with this paper I have not knowingly withheld anything that

BABY DOROTHY ROSE.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph supplied by Hugh Low & Co. of a plant of the rose which was originally named Maman Levassieur, but which has been renamed, with the originator's consent, Baby Dorothy, a much better appellation.

The rose is a Baby Rambler of Dorothy Perkins color, which is a sufficient guarantee of its value to the trade. The rose is being offered in Europe this season, and doubtless will have wide dissemination in this country. It is adapted either to bedding or forcing and will be of inestimable value in the making of the now popular basket and hamper arrangements of blooming plants for Christmas and Easter.

ROSES FOR DESIGN WORK.

Are there any roses, suitable to use in design work, that will bloom well in pots in a night temperature of 55 degrees? I. E. L.

Both Bride and Bridesmaid roses will bloom in pots at the temperature given, though not so freely as they would do in benches. Some other varieties, such as Kaiserin, make a stronger growth in pots, but do not flower so freely or so constantly as the two given above. In them you have a pink and a white that are hard to beat for design work.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The bulletin of the American Rose Society, with the proceedings of the year, embracing the able papers of Theodore Wirth, E. G. Hill and M. H. Walsh, is now in press. Besides these papers, the bulletin gives a good account of the discussions which ensued, in which some of the ablest men took part, including W. C. Barry, W. H. Elliott, John Cook, William A. Manda, Adolph Farenwald, E. G. Hill and P. O'Mara.

The certificates to be sent to life members and the certificates for exhibitors of new roses will soon be mailed.

The Chicago people are already astir with promise of everything that can be asked for to boom roses in every shape at the next meeting, and the western people say to the eastern folk, "Join us with both hands."

HYDRANGEAS IN TUBS.

Please advise me as to the best treatment for hydrangeas in tubs after they have finished blooming. Shall I cut off the blooms that have passed? Which are the next year's blooms on the stems? How shall I treat the hydrangeas in tubs so as to have them in good shape for next year? L. S.

Hydrangeas which have done blooming should have the flower heads removed without delay. It is too late now to get supply to hydrangeas from this time, in order to fully ripen the wood. Give them all possible sunshine and keep just moist enough to prevent wilting. Do not allow the plants to sustain anything like a hard freeze. Two or 3 degrees below freezing will not hurt plants with matured wood, but plants exposed to a temperature of 20 degrees above zero are usually ruined, so far as flowering is concerned, for a season.

A cellar or shed, moderately light and dry and just clear of frost, makes an ideal winter storage place for these plants. A little frost will not harm them. Keep them fairly dry at the root all winter and ventilate whenever weather conditions permit. C. W.

WINTERING BAY TREES.

We have some large bay trees to winter in the greenhouse this season. What temperature is best, and do they require any special treatment in the way of watering, etc.? G. L. W.

The sweet bay, Laurus nobilis, is quite a hardy plant. We have seen many fine specimens growing outdoors in Great Britain which were never protected and any growths from the stems which have carried the flower heads. You must depend chiefly on the shoots made this season which have not bloomed. When starting the plants in the spring, shorten back the previous year's wood to two or three pairs of eyes and do at that time any necessary top-dressing or re-tubbing.

It is best to gradually reduce the water which were exposed to occasional temperatures of 15 to 20 degrees below freezing. In America we of course cannot winter them without protection. They do not need the heat of a greenhouse. If you have a well-lighted shed or cellar which just excludes frost, they will come through nicely and light freezing will not harm them. Do not allow them to become dry at the root. The soil should always be fairly moist, even in midwinter, for no evergreens will withstand dryness at the root and not show after-effects of it.

If you have no suitable shed or cellar, give your plants space in the coldest greenhouse, where they can have an abundance of air. There will be no need to house them before the end of October in any part of the United States.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Lilium Philippense.

This lovely lily, reintroduced two or three years ago and now comparatively plentiful and inexpensive, is well worth increased attention. The flowers are larger and longer than those of L. Harrisii or longiflorum, with a delightful odor. The stems are slender but wiry, the foliage grasslike. The whole plant has a peculiar grace, which we can not find in any other lily. As a rule the bulbs, which are quite small, carry one or two flowers to each stem. Occasionally more than one stem comes from a bulb, and a peculiarity of the plant is that after one lot of flowers is cut another cut of spikes is often produced. For cutting, this lily is splendid, while in funeral designs it is superb.

The best way to treat L. Philippense is to put several bulbs in each 6-inch pot or pan, place in a frame or cool house for a short time, until growths are three or four inches high, then shift to a bench in a house where a temperature of 60 to 65 degrees at night is kept. Under such conditions plants will flower easily in eight to ten weeks after potting. Bulbs must not be left out of the soil a moment after being received, for they start to make roots and shoots with astonishing rapidity. As it flowers in half the time required to bloom Harrisii, this lily should prove a valuable commercial variety.

Pentstemons.

Cuttings of pentstemons should now be taken, for these are very useful bedding plants. Select those with the softest wood and of such colors as are most pleasing. Plant moderately thick in flats of light, sandy soil and keep shaded in a coldframe until rooted. They may be carried over winter in a coldpit just cleared of freezing, or on the shelf in a cold greenhouse. Give them the fullest sunlight as soon as rooted. These cuttings, if potted off early in February, will make excellent stock for spring sales, being much earlier in flowering and altogether more satisfactory than spring seedlings.

Antirrhinums.

Where a bench is at disposal and can be planted now, a fine crop of snapdragon spikes may be had for Christmas. Space, however, is so valuable in most establishments until the chrysanthemum season is over that most growers wait until benches are cleared of chrysanthemums before planting their stock. Young plants in 2½-inch pots which are becoming moderately potbound will be benefited by a shift into 4-inch pots. Keep them in a coldframe for some time yet and pinch out all flowering shoots. Cuttings put in now will give nice plants for late benching. Do not grow a miscellaneous mixture of colors, but rather select a good batch each of red, yellow, white and pink, all of which are salable shades.

Asparagus Sprengeri.

Have you a sufficient stock of that ever-useful plant, Asparagus Sprengeri? Remember that every customer you may have who orders a 25-cent bouquet wants a little greenery, just for good measure, and Sprengeri fills the bill most economically and satisfactorily. There is always a good market call for bunches of this popular asparagus, while none having design work or the supplying of cemetery bouquets can well afford to be without it. Look over your old plants now, pick off any dead or decaying shoots and, if they have been in the benches a considerable time, give a surfacing of well-rotted manure. If bench space is scarce you can get a good number of sprays by filling a few large baskets and suspending them in any house with a winter temperature of 50 degrees. If you are short of stock for cutting from, put some of your best pot plants in a bench containing four or five inches of soil. They will make considerable growth before winter.

Freecias.

Your early batch of freecias will now have made considerable growth. If you still have them in frames and want a few for Christmas, move them into a house where a night reading of 50 to 55 degrees is kept in winter, place on a shelf well up to the light and see that they are afforded plenty of water. Later batches will be all the better in frames a while longer. Stir the surface soil occasionally and remove all weeds. Be careful not to water too freely until the flats or pots are well filled with roots. Another batch of bulbs for succession may now be started.

Preparations for Housing.

We are now past the middle of September and, while delightful weather and fairly warm nights have so far been vouchsafed to us, a change to frost may come any night now. We have known a killing frost to come as early as September 24, and, on the other hand, have had vegetation unscathed until the middle of October. We are never safe after the middle of September, and it will be unwise to risk any tender plants outdoors after this date unless facilities for protection are at hand.

Stevias are specially sensitive; a breath of frost blights them. Give them as cold a house as possible.

Frames containing cyclamens, calceolarias, primulas, cinerarias and other plants will not need any further covering than the sashes for a while yet, but if ferns, ornamental foliage plants and other more susceptible plants are in them still, they should be moved where they can soon get the benefit of a little fire heat.

Geraniums of the bedding type, show pelargoniums, marguerites and similar plants will be all right in frames for some time.

Hydrangeas, rambler roses, lilacs and other shrubs for forcing should have all possible sunshine outdoors. Each of these needs some frost before housing.

If you have omitted putting in cuttings of coleus, alternantheras and similar stock, do so at once. Do not lift old plants, as many do. They will yield you a harvest of mealy bug. Label any cannas, dahlias, gladioli or outdoor stock you want true to name while the flowering season lasts.

Heating Apparatus.

We presume your boilers are overhauled, where such attention was needed, and that heating apparatus generally is in good condition. It is poor policy to leave work of this kind until the advent of nipping nights, but year by year it is the same old story—a strenuous rush to get necessary repairs made to avoid a freeze-up. We hope you closed your coal contracts some time ago, while fuel was on its summer basis. Get your winter supply in, or as much as you can house, while the weather remains pleasant.

Propagating Bench.

The drainage and sand in your propagating bench should be removed before the active work of increasing stock commences. Clean the bench out thoroughly, washing and scrubbing after the sand is removed. Give the inside of the benches a washing of hot lime before refilling. Use three inches of coarse cinders for drainage. Over this place a good layer of moss, then three inches of sand, well pressed down, and afterwards soaked with the hose. Neither the coarse nor the fine sand should be used. Try to strike the happy medium. To give it more porosity, if fine, add a proportion of finely screened charcoal to it.

Brief Reminders.

Keep gloxinias and tuberous-rooted begonias drier at the root as they pass out of flower. Do not make the drying too sudden.

Poinsettias and Euphorbia jacquiniæ-flora should now be housed or loss of foliage may result. Give them full sunshine.

Use the hose for overhead syringing with greater judgment now. Plants should have their foliage dry before nightfall. This is particularly true of carnations and chrysanthemums.

Nerines should now be pushing their flower spikes. Pot over any urgently requiring it, remembering that these pretty bulbs do best when pots are well matted with roots.

Give mignonette abundant ventilation and watch for green cabbage worms now getting in their work.

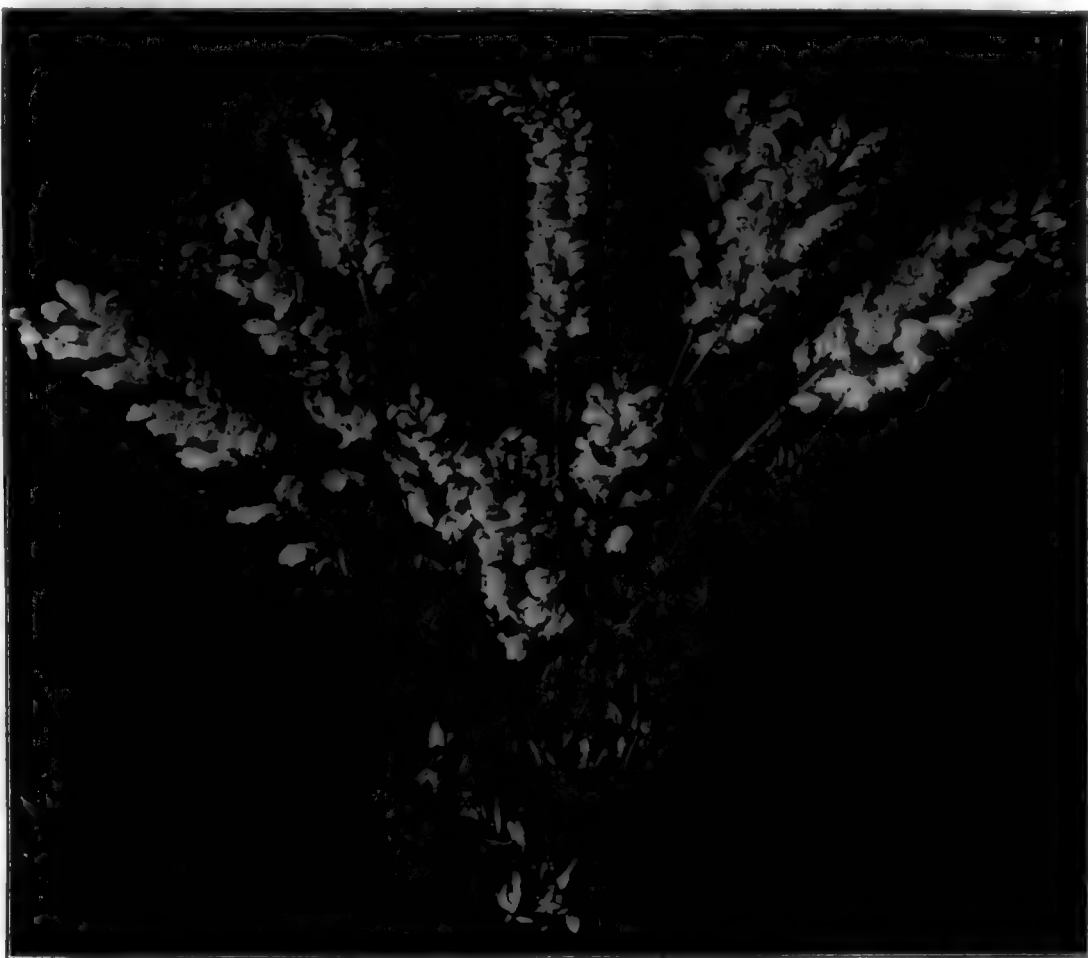

Finish putting in geranium cuttings. Do not make the mistake of standing the pots outdoors. A soddening rain will cause many to rot.

Keep azaleas, ericas and other hard-wooded plants outdoors in a sunny location as late as the weather will permit.

Lay rambler roses on their sides if they have the wood well matured. A daily spraying overhead will keep them plump.

Do not allow greenflies to secure a foothold on cinerarias and calceolarias. A fresh layer of tobacco stems among the pots will act as a deterrent.

Keep the runners, now appearing in goodly numbers, cut off the single violets and ply the cultivator among them.

GREENS FOR THE RETAILER.

[A paper by D. J. Sinclair, of Toronto, Ont., read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, in convention at London, Ont., August 29, 1907.]

When asked to prepare a paper on this subject, I was much at sea as to what would be expected, and also as to how to treat the subject that the members of this association might receive the most good from any discussion that might follow.

First, what does the term "greens" imply? I take it for granted that all greenhouse greens, as well as the different varieties of imported southern greens, are included, which will make a list something like this: Greenhouse greens—smilax, Asparagus plumosus, Asparagus Sprengeri, adiantum, and cut nephrolepis. Hardy greens—native ferns, galax, leucothoe, boxwood, and southern smilax.

A Perplexing Question.

Now, I am not here to tell anything of the merits or demerits of the various greens mentioned, how they can be used, etc., as you are all conversant with that part of it, but what you do want to know is how to sell carnations at 50 cents per dozen when they are $3 per hundred wholesale, and put in a nice lot of green (gratis), asparagus preferred, and make money. There is the question that many retail florists have to face today. No florist will do any worrying over what to cover a design with, what to back a spray with, or what to decorate a house or church with. The day for these worries is at an end. With the present system of cold storage, all these southern greens are successfully carried through the whole season, and it is only a matter of time and we will find the Canadian trade using the southern hardy greens as extensively, proportionately, as they do in the United States.

Greenhouse Stock Crowded Out.

But with the more extensive use of imported green, our greenhouse stock will be to a certain extent crowded out. A few years ago smilax was used almost exclusively for covering designs. Now, hardy ferns and galax are used to quite as good effect, and are much cheaper. This makes it more difficult to get smilax when it is wanted, on account of the small quantity grown. Asparagus still holds its own for a cut flower green, and here comes the perplexing question, how to give the asparagus that cost 3 cents to 4 cents per spray away with the cut flowers, or, how to charge extra for it without offending the customer. It has been suggested that the retail florists get together and agree upon some kind of uniformity in this, as well as other questions, but the great difference in the location of the stores and in the classes of customers makes it very hard to do this.

A Choice of Tactics.

It is simply up to the florist and his clerks to use their heads a little and they will soon get wise to the way some of the shrewd flower buyers are using them. As an instance, A sells carnations at 75 cents per dozen and gives the green gratis. B sells his at 60 cents per dozen and charges extra for the green. A customer of A goes to B's store and buys, but is horrified at being charged extra for the green, and informs B that A always gives the loveliest lot of asparagus "fern" with the carnations and does not charge extra. The purchaser, of course, does not for a moment intimate that the price at A's was 75 cents. B will nine times out of ten give the green to get a customer, and save a fuss. Here is the mistake. B has made a precedent and it is impossible to break away from this precedent when this customer comes back again. The best plan is to have a rule and stick to it. Either have the price so as to give green, or, if you decide to charge extra for the green, make that the rule and stick to it. Some florists make it a rule to give hardy ferns with cut flowers, but if the customer insists on asparagus, then charge extra for it.

Educate the Public.

One question that might be raised is, can asparagus and smilax be sold profitably, cheaper than at present? The largest and most extensive growers of these greens tell us that the present price is as low as these can be sold for and leave a fair margin. It is, therefore, up to the retailer to educate the public to either one system or the other. Either charge a price so as to be able to put in the green, or make it a rule to charge extra for the green. Which system is the best is a question that has many debatable points, each system having its advantages and disadvantages. One thing, however, I do know—that the retail florist who gives the asparagus and smilax gratis uses the most; does he sell the most cut flowers?

and not at all unless good growing weather prevails. I would break it up as fine as possible, mix it with about six times its bulk of soil and apply it to the bench about a quarter inch thick. Along toward spring it can be applied twice as heavy without injury. If your carnations are growing strong it will perhaps not injure them now, but I would prefer to wait until about the middle of October. By that time the roots have worked through the soil pretty well and the plants are thoroughly reestablished and able to take up rich food.

If you begin with good soil at planting time it will contain all the food the plants will want until the roots have worked through it. During this warm weather the blooms will not come large, whatever food may be available, but when cool weather sets in the plants will take it up and return it to you in the blooms.

A. F. J. B.

STEM-ROT.

I am growing carnations of many varieties and have been troubled with stem-rot to a great extent. I have lost 4,000 plants this summer and am still losing them. Enchantress is the most affected. I have never before had any disease among these plants. I had them in pots and did not lose any. They did not start to die until they were extra large plants. There is plenty of lime in the field and I have been giving the plants a good deal of lime since they were in the benches, but have not yet succeeded in checking the trouble.

F. J. B.

It is frequently difficult to advise in case of stem-rot trouble, as it is brought on in so many different ways. The fact that your soil contains considerable lime is no guarantee against stem-rot. While your soil will likely be naturally free from fungus, yet the lime will not preclude the possibility of its being introduced in a number of ways. Then, again, it may be present and lie dormant until a heavy rain comes, followed by a spell of hot, sultry weather. It may have been introduced with the manure or it may have been in the soil you brought out with the young plants. In the house the chances in its favor are all the greater, and during the first week the atmospheric conditions are always highly favorable to the disease.

Dusting the plants and the soil with lime and sulphur or grape dust is the best remedy I know of. This is better than spraying with fungicides, because the lime and sulphur dry up, whereas the liquids supply one of the chief elements the fungus requires to become active, namely, moisture. Stirring the soil frequently, to allow the air and sun to penetrate, will also help considerably. Bordeaux mixture and formalin, the latter used about 400 of clear water to one of the solution, are about the best fungicides we know of in the liquid class, and may be resorted to in case of extremity.

When cool weather sets in, it will be easier to check it. When you begin firing, paint one of your steam pipes with a thick paint made of lime and sulphur, in equal portions, and water. This should not be made too strong, however, when the crop is on, as it will cause the blooms to fade. A good plan is to have on a crack of air the first twenty-four hours. By that time its strength will be somewhat spent. Plenty of ventilation should always be supplied, however.

You may also have planted too deep. When mulching be sure you keep the material away from the stems. Leave a space about six inches in diameter around each stem.

A. F. J. B.

HEN MANURE FOR CARNATIONS.

How strong is it safe to use hen manure as a mulch for carnations, and at what time should it be applied? My idea is to mix the fertilizer with soil and apply to the surface of the benches. In what proportions ought I to mix it and how deep should it be applied? Carnations housed August 10 are now beginning to throw up the first crop of buds.

G. W. P.

Poultry manure makes a splendid article for feeding greenhouse crops if used judiciously. It is very strong and should be used rather sparingly at first,

MUMS FOR EXHIBITION BLOOMS.

By THOS. McHUGH, OF DORVAL, QUE.

[Read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, in convention at London, Ont., August 29, 1907.]

Your secretary has insisted on my writing a short paper on exhibition blooms. I have nothing new to tell you about their culture. Everyone knows that it is more a matter of personal attention and enthusiasm on the grower's part than any secret formula. There is no secret whatever about growing first-class mums nowadays.

In March clean, stout young cuttings should be selected. Avoid any that are yellow or otherwise unhealthy. Insert the cuttings in a bed of clean sand—no bottom heat is needed—in a temperature of about 50 degrees. Shade from strong sunshine and spray lightly on bright days until rooted. When the roots are about one inch long, the plants should be potted at once, or they will get hard. Pot them in 3-inch pots in a compost of good loam, three parts to two of leaf soil, with a good dash of sand. Spray lightly for a few days until the roots take hold and grow on in a cool house, say 45 or 50 degrees. Give all the air possible and syringe every bright day, but avoid giving them an excess of water at the roots.

Repotting.

The plants must never be allowed to get potbound until in their flowering pots. When the roots show freely around the ball of soil, shift the plants at once into pots two sizes larger, unless it is intended to plant them in the bench. The writer's practice is to pot the cuttings, when rooted, in 3-inch pots, from thence into 5-inch, and into 7-inch or 8-inch pots to flower. At each repotting the soil should be made stronger. Four parts good fibrous loam to one of decayed cow manure, with the addition of a little bone meal and wood ashes, and enough sharp sand to make it porous, is a good compost.

Proper Feeding.

Towards the end of July the plants may show the need of feeding. This condition is easily recognized by the foliage turning a lighter shade of green and the new leaves coming smaller. Begin by using a weak liquid made from cow or sheep manure, increasing the strength as the plants become accustomed to it and changing occasionally to chemical manures, such as sulphate of ammonia, nitrate of soda. Horticultural manure, one pound to fifty gallons of water, and Clay's manure, used as a top dressing and watered in, are also good. Care should be taken not to use any of these manures too strong, and never when the plants are dry or wilted from want of water.

With regard to the bud to take for exhibition blooms, the first or second crown is undoubtedly the best, provided it appears at the proper time. In this locality it is safe to take the crown bud, on the great majority of varieties, from August 20 onward.

Ventilation and Syringing.

During the warm weather keep all the air possible on the house night and day. Syringe freely to create a good growing atmosphere and keep down red spider. This pest will surely ruin the flowers if allowed to gain a good foothold. Keep a sharp lookout for green and black fly, caterpillars, grasshoppers, etc.

The foregoing, while it applies principally to pot culture, will also suit plants grown in boxes or planted on the bench. But the opinion of most growers is that bench-grown blooms lack the perfect finish of those grown right along in pots.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

Work of the Committees.

CINCINNATI, O., Sept. 7.—Golden Glow, yellow, Japanese incurved, exhibited by Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., scored ninety points, commercial scale.

Committees on Seedlings.

President Loveless has announced the committees to examine seedlings and sports on dates as follows: September 21 and 28, October 5, 12, 19 and 26, November 2, 9, 16, 23 and 30, 1907.

Exhibits, to receive attention from the committees, must in all cases be prepaid to destination, and the entry fee of $2 should be forwarded to the secretary not later than Tuesday of the week preceding examination, or may accompany the blooms. Special attention is called to the rule requiring that sports, to receive a certificate, must pass three committees.

The following gentlemen have been secured to pass on the exhibits at the New York show, to be held November 6 to 8: Eugene J. G. Dailedouze, Flatbush, N. Y.; James Wheeler, of Brookline, Mass.; William N. Craig, of North Easton, Mass. The show promises to be the best the society has ever held. Make your arrangements so that you will not be obliged to miss it. Send to the secretary for a list of premiums and try to recall if your dues are paid for 1907. DAVID FRASER, Sec'y.

DETROIT, MINN.—G. C. Moore has just completed a greenhouse built with cement blocks for walls.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—James Souden, for many years with Donaldson, is now in business for himself.

LENOX, MASS.—The Lenox Horticultural Society has issued a supplementary list of special premiums for the fall show, October 23 and 24, which may be had, with the general list issued last spring, by addressing G. Instone, secretary.

TREATMENT OF PAPER WHITES.

How can one manage to have Paper Whites in bloom when wanted on Christmas, Easter and other occasions? I have a cold, dark cellar to start them in, but it is usually too cold in winter. Could one start them by potting them in flats out in the open and covering them with soil or litter, or would they start under a bench on the north side? R. E.

To have Paper Whites in bloom for Christmas, allow three weeks in a temperature of 60 degrees after housing them. In a house 10 degrees cooler give them a month. We prefer to give them a moderately cool house, thus making the spikes stouter and giving the flowers more substance. At Easter you would find little use for this bulbous flower, even if you could hold them back as late, which you can not do.

If your cellar is just clear of freezing it will do for the flats. I can not advise putting them in the open and covering with soil. These French bulbs are more tender than the Dutch ones and quickly suffer from cold and soddenness at the roots. Under the bench on the north side of a house would answer well. You could board the front of the bench to keep it darker for them in the early stages, or hang some cloth in front of it for the same purpose.

From bulbs now in flats, flowers can be had much earlier than Christmas. If wanted at Thanksgiving, give them three weeks in heat, keep cold until a month before Christmas and they will come in easily without forcing. C. W.

HAIL AT DES MOINES.

There was a heavy fall of hail at Des Moines, Iowa, Saturday, September 7, which broke a great deal of glass for all of the west Des Moines florists, but it did not strike those located in east Des Moines. The accompanying illustration shows two different ranges of the Iowa Seed Co. The pictures look bad enough, but do not tell the whole story, for there were a great many panes cracked which look whole in the illustration, so that they had to be replaced. The Iowa Seed Co. lost about 12,000 feet. Vaughan's greenhouses lost about 5,000 feet, William Trillow about 2,000 feet and Jules Ledig about 2,000 feet. A few miles west the storm was more like a tornado and tore up large trees by the roots and tore houses and other buildings to pieces.

BEDDING PLANTS.

By ALOIS B. FREY, OF CHICAGO.

[Read before the Society of American Florists, in convention at Philadelphia, August 21, 1907.]

Riding through parks, along boulevards and country roads, speeding in the popularity and universal love for bedding plants.

There is an immense variety of these plants, from the smallest annual, like portulaca, up to the stately subtropical plants, and also the perennials must not be forgotten, for they figure greatly in various effective displays. Then we have tulips, hyacinths, daffodils, etc., for early spring flowering. No garden, therefore, need be without flowers, from the time the dainty little crocuses peep out of the snow until late in fall.

No matter how small the purse, enough seed can be purchased to obtain a very harmonious and artistic effect, as well as a continuous season of flowers. It is not the means of being able to procure a large amount of choice plants, but it is the good taste and skill of the designer, who understands how to make an arrangement to harmoniously and discriminately combine the various colors with immediate surroundings, no matter how inexpensive, that appeals to the lover of nature with all its art and beauty, and this is what we are striving for more and more every day.

The average florist, who deals in bedding plants, should by all means give this particular subject thorough study in order to be able to assist and educate his customers, who in most cases appreciate such advice and instructions in regard to arranging and planting their gardens so as to present a beautiful pic-see the finished picture before him when he designs his plans. The sooner we commence to understand how to arrange these beautiful gifts of nature better, the sooner we make a large majority of the people of our grand nation happier. We have everything to do it with; now let us understand how to do it.

To cover the subject best I have divided it into two sections: "Where to Use Them," and "How to Use Them."

Where to Use Them.

The proper selection of the place for the floral display is the first to be considered. A place where it will be properly effective is just as important as the execution of the planting, as this takes a definite part in the entire scheme. Locality, building and size of grounds must be taken into consideration. The smaller the place, the simpler should be the display; it is so easy to overcrowd a small front lawn, whereby the proper effect is entirely lost. Large places in proportion will have more elaborate plantings and the artist will have occasion to plan special features, such as courtyards, parterres, sunken gardens, Italian gardens, etc.

The front of a building is nearly always selected for the display, which is generally formal, and, if the space is limited, a narrow border of plants adjoining the building will be sufficient, with perhaps one or two beds on the lawn, proportional to the latter. There should always be plenty of green grass to offset the beds. The back yard, as a rule, is very much neglected and in many instances unsightly. Here I would advocate having a grass plot with a border plantation. How much more cheerful one would feel, looking into a well kept yard, than at a lot of rubbish!

Places of larger dimensions, with their beautiful landscape effects, must be treated more in detail. Here we have an opportunity to lay out, in connection with residences, conservatories and public buildings, courtyards, parterres, rose gardens, etc., which as a general rule are part of the architectural scheme and in harmony with the style of the building. In the last few years Italian gardens have again become quite popular, and these, especially set apart from the rest of the landscape, must be treated by themselves; they are very set and usually contain considerable color well blended together.

Besides these forms of special treatment already mentioned, we also have other flower gardens, which give an opportunity for a large variety of flowering plants, in the line of annuals, roses and perennials, etc., which, properly arranged, make a brilliant effect without interfering with the more subdued and restful landscape.

In Parks and Boulevards.

Public parks especially are a great field for floral displays and, although some authorities on landscape gardening do not favor them, I believe the public fully appreciates flowers, though utmost care must be taken not to let the flowers run wild all over the park, but keep them in the vicinity of buildings or entirely away and screened off from the quiet landscape. Boulevards, also, and small squares, can be most admirably brightened with the ornamentation of flower beds.

Last year, at the convention at Dayton, O., all our members had the rare opportunity of seeing how the surroundings trains through villages and towns all over the country, passing the magnificent palaces of the wealthy, with their beautiful lawns, and the humble cottages of the poor, surrounded by modest yards, everywhere the eyes meet the brightness of flowers and richly colored plants, which at once impress upon us ture. It requires just as much artistic judgment and ability to accomplish this as the painting of a picture on canvas. The designer must show individuality and know exactly what proportions the plants will attain, how soon they will be fully developed, also how the colors will blend together; in fact, he must of a factory can be laid out in a most praiseworthy manner. Here our bedding plants brighten daily the minds of thousands of people.

How many people are not fortunate enough to possess a home with a lawn and flower beds! There is no necessity to deprive themselves of nature's gifts, but they can enjoy them in a more modest way by keeping flower boxes, which, no matter how obscure and unassuming the dwelling, give it a homelike air and enliven the aspect of many an otherwise somber home.

On the other hand, many beautiful residences rely solely upon piazza boxes for their floral display and exquisite results can be obtained in this manner.

Finally, a few words should be devoted to the homes of our loved dead. There is nothing more soothing to the grief-stricken heart than the sight of well kept cemeteries, bedded with appropriate flowers speaking the language of peace and rest.

How to Use Them.

There are many and varied ways that the bedding plants lend themselves to; there still remains another problem to solve, namely, "How to Use Them." Here skill in artistic arrangement and harmony of colors is put to a severe test.

Starting with the beginning of the season, the various Dutch bulbs are the first ones to attract our attention. They are easily cultivated and therefore most appropriate for the amateur. Exquisite effects and color schemes can be carried out. Although their duration of bloom barely reaches more than four weeks, I think they make the most striking display of the season. Only the purest and clearest colors should be selected. Off colors and the peculiar magenta shades are hard to match with pure colors and are best planted by themselves, or far enough distant so as not to detract from them. Mixed beds containing a number of varieties look very well, but beds of all one color show by far better taste. Where a number of beds are planted, greater attention must be given to work out a harmonious color scheme. Pink, white and light blue blend admirably together; next comes yellow, then red and yellow and the various reds. It is a great deal more pleasing to the eye to let the colors run into each other by degrees than to create too great a contrast. Colonies of crocuses, snowdrops and scillas, singly and several together, irregularly scattered on the lawn, look very charming.

Pansies, bellis and myosotis are also extensively used. Although the pansies come in a multitude of colors, they are mostly used mixed and often with Bellis perennis as a border. Little advantage has been taken of working out color schemes with pansies and yet, if we stop to study their rich tints, tints which I think cannot be found in any other plant, the possibilities are wonderful.

Following these come the summer plantings with cannas, geraniums, heliotropes, begonias, petunias, coleus, acalypsas, abutilon, salvias, verbenas and a cuphea, ageratums, etc., also need enriched soil. Care must be taken, however, not to use too much fertilizer, as this would result disastrously, the plants showing an abundance of foliage in place of flowers.

Bedding plants, before being set out in their summer quarters, should be properly hardened off. They should be exposed freely to the air and sunlight at least two weeks before the planting season commences. Nothing serves this purpose better than the hotbed, no matter how much some of the growers are opposed to this sort of cultivation. It is true that the cost of labor is somewhat higher, but the superior results obtained fully justify the expenditure made, and plants hardened off in this manner suffer but very little in transplanting.

We have plants of every desirable height, from two inches up to eight feet, some with a wealth of flowers, others with richly colored foliage, some with coarser, others with more graceful features.

Consideration of the Sky Line.

In the arrangement of plantings one great object, which is one of the great principles in landscape gardening, is in many cases lost sight of, namely, the consideration of the sky line. Especially in large border plantations this should be applied. Here we have tall plantings broken with lower ones, until they finally run out to very low plants at the edge. In fact, in smaller as well as in larger displays, the relation of one bed to the other should be treated this way.

While the beds are more or less formal, they should not appear stiff. Every plant should have plenty of room for full development, and where a number of varieties are used in one bed, the tall ones should not be massed all together, but here and there one should rise above the lower ones, so as to present a loose and pleasing arrangement, and in this manner every plant will show its valuable points more advantageously. For example, a bed planted only with Ficus elastica would look very stiff, but intermingled with the graceful Grevillea robusta and a border of ivy, it would lose this stiffness and present a very pleasing effect. This shows that by careful study we can improve the bad points of one plant with the good ones of another.

Particular care should be given to the selection of the various tints, blending richly colored foliage tastefully with the more gorgeously tinted flowers, so as not to create too great a contrast. Beds of great number of other plants too numerous to be mentioned.

Treatment of the Plants.

Nearly all bedding plants thrive and flourish best in full sunlight except tuberous begonias and fuchsias, which do best in half shade, where there is plenty of indirect light. Other plants, like some of our hardy palms, phoenixes, latanias, chamærops, and the various fibrous rooted begonias, like Semperflorens, Vernon, Schmitti and fancy-leaved caladiums, do well under both conditions.

The soil for cannas, musas, ricinus and Caladium esculentum should be very rich, their growth will be so much more luxuriant, while the rest of the plants, like geraniums, begonias, verbenas, salvias, solid colors, alternating with some of less contrast, will harmoniously tie the entire display together and this will help greatly to achieve the desired plan. It is in the designer's power to present a very brilliant or a very quiet picture, according to the scheme that is required.

Quiet and restful effects are worked out by using tints of various blues, white and gray, variegated, glaucous and bronze foliage with a little touch of red. Anthericum vittatum var., Punica Granatum pumila, Abelia rupestris, heliotrope, Plumbago Capensis cœrulea and alba, Phygellus Capensis, santolina and Abutilon Savitzii lend themselves well for this purpose.

Much more could be said on the subject, but, in my opinion, one runs no risk of failure by adhering to the points laid out in my modest essay.

NIGHT-BLOOMING CEREUS.

The REVIEW is indebted to Fred Ehret, of Philadelphia, for the accompanying illustration of a night-blooming cereus and the following description, which was given to Mr. Ehret by a private gardener:

"The owner of this plant is Kensel Wills, who has been giving nightly receptions at his home, 1603 Popular street, to his numerous acquaintances to see the plant in flower. The last time Mr. Wills's plant bloomed was three years ago, when it showed three flowers. This year it showed nine flowers, and the night following two more blooms were in evidence, and during the following week several more flowers were produced. Mr. Wills is very proud of his plant, which he has had for twenty-five years. The fame of the plant has spread over a large section of the northern part of Philadelphia."

NEW YORK.

The Market.

In the east we are experiencing the vagaries of a peculiar season. August was September—cool, clear, delightful weather. September has gone back to the dog days, and business has consequently gone to the dogs. The "good old summer time," with its humidity, is with us again. It is needless to dwell on the consequences. Dullness prevails, stock is soft, and there is too much of it. The best sells readily, and at good prices, but the supply of bon ton flowers is like the number of bon ton people. The street venders are coming back to the city. This week closes the summer resorts, and the city will soon be overflowing again with displays by the sidewalk merchants, and the usual fall trade will begin, as it always does, with the advent of the cooler weather. Another week will see a decided change for the better.

Everybody must be growing asters this year, farmers, market gardeners, amateurs, even private individuals in the suburbs, whose highest ambitions were tomatoes and onions. They all have the aster fever, from the looks of the wholesalers' windows, cellars and ice-boxes. It is impossible to find an outlet for the daily receipts.

Gladioli seem to have grown better in quality, and the demand is great. There is no surplus of fine stock, such as Mr. Hendrickson, of Childs' Floral Park farms, exhibited at the last meeting of the Florists' Club.

Various Notes.

John Young has commenced to cut Beauties from his 700-foot house at Bedford Station. He says he wishes he had two more houses just as large. "The wish is father to the thought," they say.

A goodly number of the wholesalers are nursing attacks of hay fever, but there are no hayseeds among them. The new president of the S. A. F. is one of the victims.

Lyman Crow, of the Lord & Burnham Co., is enjoying his late vacation at the New England seashore resorts, as is his yearly custom, with his family.

Retail windows in New York are profusely decorated with the new nephrolepis and with hydrangeas and dahlias. In Small's a beautiful window of water lilies is most effective. Thorley uses Ficus pandurata, orchids, Gladiolus America and selected hydrangeas. Warendorff used many varieties of dahlias all the week, and by arrangement and profuseness illustrated how useful and artistic a display could be made with a comparatively common flower. Constant change of color and variety made each day worth notice. Tritomas are also largely used. Nugent's Whitmani, with artistic grouping of selected valley, orchids and roses, keeps his window an object lesson to practical Twenty-eighth street, which has its effect in neater wholesale window displays all along the line.

Wertheimer Bros. are placing another new ribbon on the market this week, which they term a rich design of interwoven leaves and foliage, suitable for Beauties and Enchantress especially.

The Johnston Heating Co. will move its New York office, October 1, to Twenty-ninth street, corner of Lexington avenue. This firm has a contract for the erection of a conservatory at Far Rockaway, amounting to over $1,400, and seems well satisfied with the business of the year.

Hitchings & Co. are now casting their boilers at the new foundry at Elizabeth, N. J. The plant will be completed and the firm fully established in the new location by the first part of November.

The Pierson U-Bar Co. is receiving many orders from Canada this fall, the fact that there is no gutter or eaves in the construction appealing to the florists of the northland, because thereby the snow storms lose their menace and importance.

Lord & Burnham are building an extensive addition to the plant of the Botanical Gardens at Washington. They also have a $20,000 contract for a building at the Agricultural College at Storrs, Conn., and one of similar proportions at the Soldiers' Home at Washington. These and other large plants at Cornell, Amherst and other colleges demonstrate the universality of interest in floriculture taken everywhere by our educational institutions.

Guttman & Weber report their plants of Imperial and Pink Imperial in fine shape and prophesy a big demand for the flowers. Victory promises to be as popular as ever this winter.

A. M. Henshaw visited some of his Jersey growers last week. He is quite sure his large store will be none too deep for the flood of stock he has arranged for.

N. Lecakes & Co. are already receiving an average of 1,000 strings of smilax weekly. Four thousand a week is the winter record. Good leucothoe and galax are arriving from the south, while more ferns are already in storage than were used all last season.

F. O. Pierce Co. moved on Monday of this week to the new store, at 12 West Broadway and 227 Greenwich street.

The Kervan Co. now occupies both floors of the new store on West Twenty-eighth street. Regular supplies of wild smilax are arriving daily, and fresh palmetto canes are now in abundance. This firm has facilities for a large winter's trade. Mr. Kervan, Sr., has just returned from the Grand Army reunion, at Saratoga, N. Y.

Russin & Handling report a large shipping trade. Their baskets and sheaves are of their own manufacture.

General complaint is made of the slowness of collections in every line of the trade, but if advance orders with the bulb men and wholesale supply houses are a safe indication of prosperity, this will be the best season ever known in New York.

Gunther Bros. are handling Herbert & Sons' dahlias. The weather has dominated quality and first arrivals have not been up to expectations, but improvement is noted daily and grand stock is promised.

During the alterations and repainting and general refurbishing of the wholesale stores many of the firms have used the awnings and rear yards to their advantage. John Gunther says it reminds him of the story of the barber who announced by sign at the front of the store, "During alterations, customers will be shaved in the back."

Frank Millang and family are home from a two months' trip in Europe. Mr. Millang has fifteen pounds more of good

German weight than when he went away. Tuberoses are here again, but J. K. Allen says that for years it has not paid to grow them. There is no demand for them.

Among the Rhinebeck violet growers, J. Vonder Linden has 35,000 plants there and 40,000 at Staatsburg. The output is all handled by B. S. Slinn, Jr. September 10 Mr. Slinn received seven boxes.

George Cotsonas & Co. have already two and a half million fancy ferns in storage. Sixteen men are out gathering fern stock for the winter season. Large quantities of new green galax are arriving.

The Geller Florist Supply Co. has increased its working force in the store, put a traveler on the road and added a new wagon to its conveniences. Mr. Geller says the importations selected by himself in Europe this summer are beginning to arrive.

David D. Howell entertained Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Ludwig, of Allegheny, Pa., last week and showed them the sights. Mr. Howell is an ex-resident of Pittsburgh and announces that he will shortly open a retail store in New York.

In Brooklyn on Thursday last, J. V. Phillips had the decorations for the Held-Greene and Seaver-Fiske weddings. These were both home weddings and the decorative work was elaborate. W. A. Phillips, his son, and Miss Grace Erskine were married recently.

S. Masur, of Brooklyn, has an aster farm near Rahway, N. J., that has kept his store filled with fine stock for weeks. His new establishment is far in advance of the old and his business has doubled since his removal to 238 Fulton street.

William Hanft, formerly with Fleischman, has taken a position in the store of Thomas Young, Jr., on West Twenty-eighth street.

John P. Scherer, of Union Hill, has large contracts for wreathing. He will make his headquarters hereafter at his New York store, 468 Sixth avenue.

William Starke has a stock of several hundred fine Whitmani ferns in his conservatory at 52 West Twenty-ninth street, that are selling fast. There is a seemingly universal demand for the Boston fern and its many children, this fall, in excess of any former season.

Next week, commencing Tuesday, September 24, the seventy-sixth annual exhibition of the American Institute takes place at the Bakeley Lyceum building, 19 West Forty-fourth street. Dahlias are featured. There will also be fruits, vegetables, orchids, herbaceous flowers, palms, ferns and floral novelties.

State of Business.

Stock is coming in much better, and improving right along. Some good roses are seen, and also some carnations from new stock which are good flowers but short in stem. Some fine gladioli are still coming in. Asters are rather scarce at present and are running poor; few good ones to be seen. The weather has been extremely hot for this season of the year.

WM. C. YOUNG.

William C. Young, who was installed president of the St. Louis Florists' Club at its meeting September 12, was born in Toronto, Canada, June 1, 1857. When he was eight years of age his parents removed to St. Louis, locating in what was then far out in the suburbs. After three years of country schooling he entered the employ of a firm known as C. Young & Sons. He has continued with this establishment ever since. He was admitted to partnership in 1887. The firm is now C. Young & Sons Co. and they do a large business, including all departments of the trade. They have a large retail cut flower business, an excellent plant trade and do a large volume in the seed department.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The market has not changed much in the last two weeks. Good roses are still scarce, home-grown ones being poor. Some fine stock is shipped in from Chicago. Carnations are making their appearance once more, but are rather short in stem. Gladioli are plentiful, but extra good ones are scarce. Dahlias are now coming in, but in small quantities. Asters are plentiful and selling at $1 to $1.50 per hundred. This market is well supplied with greens.

Various Notes.

The demand for funeral work is good. Florists are quite busy arranging and preparing for the interstate fair and exposition, which will open September 23 in this city. The outlook is good and everybody is looking forward to that week. There are quite a number of premiums offered and everyone who enters fully expects to win. The grounds are located just south of the residence part of the city, on the Elm Ridge race track.

Nelson Jarrett is quite busy installing a new hot water boiler in the two large houses just completed. He has an office and salesroom attached to these houses and soon will be in shape to do business. Mr. Jarrett sells the bulk of his output at the City market, as his place is quite far in the outskirts of the city; but the city is fast coming his way.

Miss Lillie Humfeld, bookkeeper for the W. H. Humfeld Floral Co., has gone on an extended trip east for her vacation. She will visit Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Washington, Philadelphia, New York, Boston and other points. She expects to be gone about five weeks. W. H.

Various Notes.

John Young has commenced to cut Beauties from his 700-foot house at Bedford Station. He says he wishes he had two more houses just as large. "The wish is father to the thought," they say.

A goodly number of the wholesalers are nursing attacks of hay fever, but there are no hayseeds among them. The new president of the S. A. F. is one of the victims.

Lyman Crow, of the Lord & Burnham Co., is enjoying his late vacation at the New England seashore resorts, as is his yearly custom, with his family.

Retail windows in New York are profusely decorated with the new nephrolepis and with hydrangeas and dahlias. In Small's a beautiful window of water lilies is most effective. Thorley uses Ficus pandurata, orchids, Gladiolus America and selected hydrangeas. War endorff used many varieties of dahlias all the week, and by arrangement and profuseness illustrated how useful and artistic a display could be made with a comparatively common flower. Constant change of color and variety made each day worth notice. Tritomas are also largely used. Nugent's Whitman, with artistic grouping of selected valley, orchids and roses, keeps his window an object lesson to practical Twenty-eighth street, which has its effect in neater wholesale window displays all along the line.

Wertheimer Bros. are placing another new ribbon on the market this week, which they term a rich design of interwoven leaves and foliage, suitable for Beauties and Enchantress especially.

The Johnston Heating Co. will move its New York office, October 1, to Twenty-ninth street, corner of Lexington avenue. This firm has a contract for the erection of a conservatory at Far Rockaway, amounting to over $1,400, and seems well satisfied with the business of the year.

Hitchings & Co. are now casting their boilers at the new foundry at Elizabeth, N. J. The plant will be completed and the firm fully established in the new location by the first part of November.

The Pierson U-Bar Co. is receiving many orders from Canada this fall, the fact that there is no gutter or eaves in the construction appealing to the florists of the northland, because thereby the snow storms lose their menace and importance.

Lord & Burnham are building an extensive addition to the plant of the Botanical Gardens at Washington. They also have a $20,000 contract for a building at the Agricultural College at Storrs, Conn., and one of similar proportions at the Soldiers' Home at Washington. These and other large plants at Cornell, Amherst and other colleges demonstrate the universality of interest in floriculture taken everywhere by our educational institutions.

Guttman & Weber report their plants of Imperial and Pink Imperial in fine shape and prophesy a big demand for the flowers. Victory promises to be as popular as ever this winter.

A. M. Henshaw visited some of his Jersey growers last week. He is quite sure his large store will be none too deep for the flood of stock he has arranged for.

N. Lecakes & Co. are already receiving an average of 1,000 strings of smilax weekly. Four thousand a week is the winter record. Good leucothoe and galax are arriving from the south, while more ferns are already in storage than were used all last season.

F. O. Pierce Co. moved on Monday of this week to the new store, at 12 West Broadway and 227 Greenwich street.

The Kervan Co. now occupies both floors of the new store on West Twenty-eighth street. Regular supplies of wild smilax are arriving daily, and fresh palmetto canes are now in abundance. This firm has facilities for a large winter's trade. Mr. Kervan, Sr., has just returned from the Grand Army reunion, at Saratoga, N. Y.

Russin & Handling report a large shipping trade. Their baskets and sheaves are of their own manufacture.

General complaint is made of the slowness of collections in every line of the trade, but if advance orders with the bulb men and wholesale supply houses are a safe indication of prosperity, this will be the best season ever known in New York.

Gunther Bros. are handling Herbert & Sons' dahlias. The weather has dominated quality and first arrivals have not been up to expectations, but improvement is noted daily and grand stock is promised.

During the alterations and repainting and general refurnishing of the wholesale stores many of the firms have used the awnings and rear yards to their advantage. John Gunther says it reminds him of the story of the barber who announced by sign at the front of the store, "During alterations, customers will be shaved in the back."

Frank Millang and family are home from a two months' trip in Europe. Mr. Millang has fifteen pounds more of good

German weight than when he went away. Tuberoses are here again, but J. K. Allen says that for years it has not paid to grow them. There is no demand for them.

Among the Rhinebeck violet growers, J. Vonder Linden has 35,000 plants there and 40,000 at Staatsburg. The output is all handled by B. S. Slinn, Jr. September 10 Mr. Slinn received seven boxes.

George Cotsonas & Co. have already two and a half million fancy ferns in storage. Sixteen men are out gathering fern stock for the winter season. Large quantities of new green galax are arriving.

The Geller Florist Supply Co. has increased its working force in the store, put a traveler on the road and added a new wagon to its conveniences. Mr. Geller says the importations selected by himself in Europe this summer are beginning to arrive.

David D. Howell entertained Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Ludwig, of Allegheny, Pa., last week and showed them the sights. Mr. Howell is an ex-resident of Pittsburgh and announces that he will shortly open a retail store in New York.

In Brooklyn on Thursday last, J. V. Phillips had the decorations for the Held-Greene and Seaver-Fiske weddings. These were both home weddings and the decorative work was elaborate. W. A. Phillips, his son, and Miss Grace Erskine were married recently.

S. Masur, of Brooklyn, has an aster farm near Rahway, N. J., that has kept his store filled with fine stock for weeks. His new establishment is far in advance of the old and his business has doubled since his removal to 238 Fulton street.

William Hanft, formerly with Fleischman, has taken a position in the store of Thomas Young, Jr., on West Twenty-eighth street.

John P. Scherer, of Union Hill, has large contracts for wreathing. He will make his headquarters hereafter at his New York store, 468 Sixth avenue.

William Starke has a stock of several hundred fine Whitmani ferns in his conservatory at 52 West Twenty-ninth street, that are selling fast. There is a seemingly universal demand for the Boston fern and its many children, this fall, in excess of any former season.

Next week, commencing Tuesday, September 24, the seventy-sixth annual exhibition of the American Institute takes place at the Bakeley Lyceum building, 19 West Forty-fourth street. Dahlias are featured. There will also be fruits, vegetables, orchids, herbaceous flowers, palms, ferns and floral novelties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

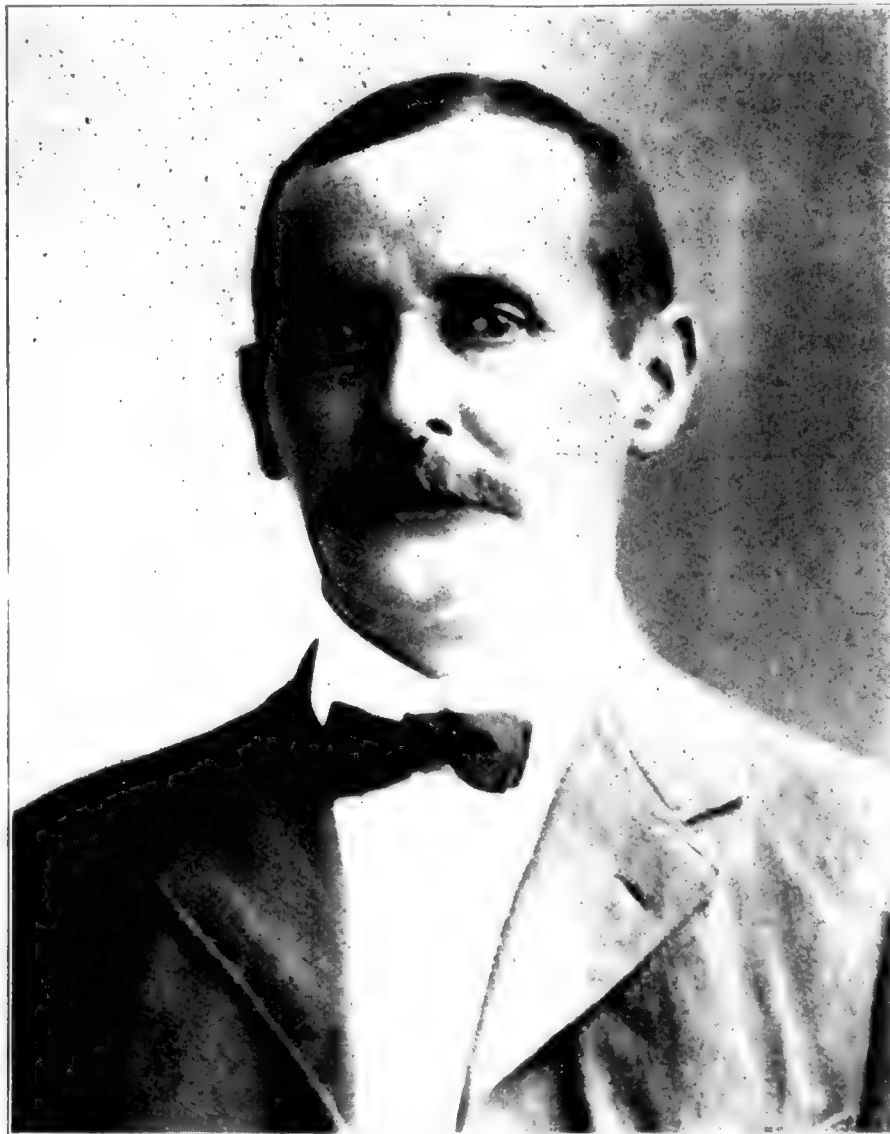

State of Business.

Stock is coming in much better, and improving right along. Some good roses are seen, and also some carnations from new stock which are good flowers but short in stem. Some fine gladioli are still coming in. Asters are rather scarce at present and are running poor; few good ones to be seen. The weather has been extremely hot for this season of the year.

Various Notes.

Sherman Stephens reports a busy time for a week or so, on funeral work. He has rebuilt one of his rose houses and built one large house in place of two smaller ones.

There was a good turn-out at our club meeting Tuesday evening, September 10, and everyone was glad to have our vice-president, R. A. Currie, with us again after six weeks' illness. After the meeting all went to the bowling alleys. The three high rollers were McKellar, Reichert and Bauman.

William C. Young.

The parks here are looking fine at this time.

The Munk Floral Co. is busy completing its range and has a nice lot of carnations and mums coming on.

Gus Ackerman is cutting some fine roses and carnations, which find ready sale.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. has just completed its 75-foot stack and is busy with piping. The roses and carnations are looking fine and some stock is being cut from the new place.

A. J. Baldwin, of Newark, O., was a visitor this week.

J. M.

WM. C. YOUNG.

William C. Young, who was installed president of the St. Louis Florists' Club at its meeting September 12, was born in Toronto, Canada, June 1, 1857. When he was eight years of age his parents removed to St. Louis, locating in what was then far out in the suburbs. After three years of country schooling he entered the employ of a firm known as C. Young & Sons. He has continued with this establishment ever since. He was admitted to partnership in 1887. The firm is now C. Young & Sons Co. and they do a large business, including all departments of the trade. They have a large retail cut flower business, an excellent plant trade and do a large volume in the seed department.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The market has not changed much in the last two weeks. Good roses are still scarce, home-grown ones being poor. Some fine stock is shipped in from Chicago. Carnations are making their appearance once more, but are rather short in stem. Gladioli are plentiful, but extra good ones are scarce. Dahlias are now coming in, but in small quantities. Asters are plentiful and selling at $1 to $1.50 per hundred. This market is well supplied with greens.

Various Notes.

The demand for funeral work is good. Florists are quite busy arranging and preparing for the interstate fair and exposition, which will open September 23 in this city. The outlook is good and everybody is looking forward to that week. There are quite a number of premiums offered and everyone who enters fully expects to win. The grounds are located just south of the residence part of the city, on the Elm Ridge race track.

Nelson Jarrett is quite busy installing a new hot water boiler in the two large houses just completed. He has an office and salesroom attached to these houses and soon will be in shape to do business. Mr. Jarrett sells the bulk of his output at the City market, as his place is quite far in the outskirts of the city; but the city is fast coming his way.

Miss Lillie Humfeld, bookkeeper for the W. H. Humfeld Floral Co., has gone on an extended trip east for her vacation. She will visit Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Washington, Philadelphia, New York, Boston and other points. She expects to be gone about five weeks.

THE WEEKLY

is printed Wednesday evening and mailed early Thursday morning. It is earnestly requested that all advertisers and correspondents mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday, or Tuesday at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS MARCH 4, '01.

Officers for 1907: President, William J. Stewart, Boston; vice-president, John Westcott, Philadelphia; secretary, P. J. Hauswirth, 232 Michigan avenue, Chicago; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary, P. J. Hauswirth, 232 Michigan avenue, Chicago; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

DON'T substitute. If you have not the stock called for, send the money back.

THIS year's annual report of the St. Louis park commissioner is the usual superb piece of printing.

THE American Association of Farmers' Institute Workers will hold its twelfth annual meeting at Washington, D. C., October 23 to 25.

M. CRAWFORD, who is now growing gladiolus bulbs for the trade at Shiocton, Wis., sent the REVIEW a pail of fine spikes one day last week.

THE new rose, a sport from Belle Siebrecht, being introduced by Hugh Low & Co., Bush Hill Park, Middlesex, England, is spelled Joseph Lowe, not Low, as it appeared in the REVIEW of August 22.

DAVID FRASER, secretary of the Chrysanthemum Society, says: "The judges at Cincinnati speak very highly of Chrysanthemum Golden Glow, exhibited by Smith & Son, and say it is good in every way and will be a valuable addition to the early flowering varieties. It was shown in Pittsburg September 3 in fine shape."

It may be possible to govern by injunction, but you can not cure diseases of plants by that process, as instanced by the failure of the Charleston, S. C., growers to secure an order making permanent the injunction against one of their number whom they seek to hold responsible for blight. The outcome of the interesting suit is reported on page 34 of this issue.

THE increase in the cost of wrapping paper and twine has been an item in the accounts of many florists. Manila has advanced thirty per cent in the last six months, and the finer grades of tissue have gone up, some of them as much as 100 per cent. Hollis & Duncan, who supply a large part of the trade in Chicago, say they can see no early prospect for a reduction in prices.

FROSTS now are due at any time over that part of the United States where the interests of our trade are greatest.

VARIEGATED IMPATIENS.

Will you kindly inform me if there is any variegated impatiens, as I have about a dozen plants of them which originated with me? W. C. D.

I have seen occasional variegated plants of Impatiens Sultani and one of I. Holstei. I do not know if any such are in commerce. I think it probable that they are not uncommon, however. It is possible your plant may be a desirable novelty for bedding and pot culture. Send leaves to some prominent plant specialist and ask his opinion of it. C. W.

COULDN'T ANSWER HIS MAIL.

A subscriber in the west sends the REVIEW a circular issued by William Kuyk, of Hillegom, Holland, giving details as to the new carnations originated by Alfred Giraud and for which varieties Mr. Kuyk is looking for a purchaser. The circular begins:

"With reference to the advertisement in the WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW of June 20, 1907, page 31, I received so many letters that I decided to make a circular giving the desired particulars."

When an advertiser, who offers for sale the entire stock of a new plant, gets so many applications for details that he cannot answer them all by letter, he ought to be pretty well satisfied with the results from an advertisement that cost $10, and evidently Mr. Kuyk is.

STATE OF GENERAL BUSINESS.

Fall trade in dry goods and wearing apparel picked up considerably last week, and judging from the number of orders booked the volume of business this season will compare favorably with that of last year. The more promising aspect of the corn crop as the result of favorable weather was reflected in more confident buying by country dealers. Tight money is still a deterrent influence in the general business situation, but with the increased movement of crops there is noticeable improvement in mercantile collections throughout the agricultural districts. Visiting country merchants were present in the cities in large numbers and purchased freely.

There was some increase in the demand for building material, though the stringency of the money market is a factor in curtailing construction work. Dealers in paints and oils had nothing to complain of, though some of them declared business could be a little better. The steel trade, if anything, showed a slight improvement. A good many orders were placed by buyers who had been holding off for more favorable money developments.

THE DEATH ROLL.

A. G. Hall.

A. G. Hall died at his home in Fairmont, W. Va., September 9, after a long illness. He was 78 years of age. For many years he had been postmaster of Fairmont. Of late years he had conducted a flower and garden seed store. This business is now in charge of his son, E. M. Hall. Another son, Harry Hall, resides in Chicago.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

A week of unseasonably hot weather has had a depressing effect upon the market. For five or six days the temperature has been 10 to 15 degrees above the normal for the time of the year, and all lines of business are feeling the effect. We are having 85 degrees in the shade, with a minimum of 72 degrees at night, at a date when we usually begin to look for our first frosts.

Not only has the warm weather taken the desire for flowers from the public, but it has resulted in a considerable increase in daily receipts. Stock is coming on too fast. Not only are receipts increased, but quality is impaired. Roses, in the first part of September, were considerably better than usual, but the heat has taken the quality out of nearly all varieties. There continues to be a fair demand for Beauties, with receipts about equal to the daily requirements. White roses now are in larger supply and about equal to the demand, which is largely for stock for funeral work, with which the local retailers have been especially favored in the last few days. Kaiserin still holds up well, for it is the best hot-weather rose. Other varieties are all in good supply. Stems are getting longer daily.

Carnations again cut a considerable figure on the market. The receipts are steadily increasing, and the increase has been rapid since the warm days came on. They have not helped the quality. Stems are gradually lengthening, and as soon as we get a little seasonable weather to put crispness into the blooms we shall have carnations equal to the requirements of the most exacting. If the heat continues we shall soon have supplies which will trouble the wholesalers to find a market, although now all good carnations are selling well, and those with the 4-inch stems are bringing as much as could be expected.

In spite of the fact that some growers say they are near the end of their aster crops, still the market is overloaded, especially with the poor stock. There is an abundance of large, long-stemmed asters to meet all requirements. The retailers have been able to make a good profit on the heavy run of funeral work of the last few days by using white asters.

There are a few violets received in each of four or five commission houses. The quality runs from pretty poor to fairly good. Last week as high as 75 cents per hundred was received, but this week 50 cents is the top price, and some violets go to waste. There really is no use in sending them to such a market as we have this week. Chrysanthemums in yellow, pink and white are to be had on advance orders.

Gladioli continue to be a burden. A little good stock sells, but the common Bros. Co. were more than double those of the same month last year. E. E. Pieser, of the Kennicott Bros. Co., says that in the first ten days of September as much business was done as in the first twenty days of the month last year. Other houses doubtless could also make good reports.

Fred Sperry, of Vaughan & Sperry, is due back from Colorado this week.

E. Fransen calls attention to the fact that it was a year ago on September 17 that Scheiden & Schoos opened in the Flower Growers' market. He says the firm is more than pleased with the result of the year's business. They now are cutting a good crop of carnations and doing quite a shipping trade.

Mike Fink, who has been with the A. L. Randall Co. since he went out of the retail business on Cottage Grove avenue, started in with the Kennicott Bros. Co. September 16.

George Reinberg has just put in a new Orr & Lockett refrigerator at the city store, so that now he has a box thirty-four feet long and eight feet deep. It can be cooled either with ice or with outside air, when the weather is suitable.

John Kruchten has his store in fine shape for the fall business. An ornamental railing has been put around the balcony and the entire place treated to a coat of white enamel.

G. H. Pieser, president and secretary of the Kennicott Bros. Co., has been away this week on a brief vacation.

Capt. A. I. Simmons is able to be about once more, after spending four weeks in bed with an abscess on one leg.

Bros. Co. were more than double those of the same month last year. E. E. Pieser, of the Kennicott Bros. Co., says that in the first ten days of September as much business was done as in the first twenty days of the month last year. Other houses doubtless could also make good reports.

Fred Sperry, of Vaughan & Sperry, is due back from Colorado this week.

E. Fransen calls attention to the fact that it was a year ago on September 17 that Scheiden & Schoos opened in the Flower Growers' market. He says the firm is more than pleased with the result of the year's business. They now are cutting a good crop of carnations and doing quite a shipping trade.

Mike Fink, who has been with the A. L. Randall Co. since he went out of the retail business on Cottage Grove avenue, started in with the Kennicott Bros. Co. September 16.

George Reinberg has just put in a new Orr & Lockett refrigerator at the city store, so that now he has a box thirty-four feet long and eight feet deep. It can be cooled either with ice or with outside air, when the weather is suitable.

John Kruchten has his store in fine shape for the fall business. An ornamental railing has been put around the balcony and the entire place treated to a coat of white enamel.

G. H. Pieser, president and secretary of the Kennicott Bros. Co., has been away this week on a brief vacation.

Capt. A. L. Simmons is able to be about once more, after spending four weeks in bed with an abscess on one leg.

E. C. Amling is handling hydrangea blooms in large quantities. Up to this week they have sold well at three bunches, of a dozen heads each, for $1.

In spite of the fact that the Florists' Club endorsed the pending telephone ordinance, sentiment was so strongly against it that it was withdrawn from consideration at the council meeting September 12.

August Poehlmann and Adolph Poehlmann, with their wives, have returned from their trip east. Following the convention, they visited leading rose-growing establishments in the vicinity of New York and Boston. August Poehlmann says that he saw much fine stock, but that every time he goes east he comes back confirmed in the belief that Chicago has no rival as a cut flower market and producing center.

The American League baseball grounds adjoin the Wentworth avenue establishment of J. F. Kidwell & Bro. Sunday afternoon, August 15, there was a fire in the baseball bleachers and the fire department went through the Kidwell establishment to get at the place. Frank Kidwell, son of J. F. Kidwell, took exception to the way the firemen took possession and the result was an unfortunate fracas.

N. J. Wietor is spending his afternoons showing a new and speedy carriage horse that automobiles are harmless. The new barn also contains a pony outfit for the children.

J. L. Raske is preparing to reopen his flower stand in the Board of Trade building. It has been closed during the period of summer quiet.

H. E. Philpott left last week for St. Paul, where he intended to spend a few days en route to his home at Winnipeg.

A. Malchow, 2102 North Clark street, entertained the stork September 9—a girl weighing eight and one-half pounds.

Emil Buettner has returned from a trip to Yellowstone park with a party of friends.

J. S. Wilson was at Springfield September 14 to act as judge at the successful children's flower show, given under the auspices of the Springfield Florists' Club.

J. B. Deamud, Andrew McAdams and George Asmus are the local committee of the Chrysanthemum Society of America to pass on seedlings and sports.

P. J. Hauswirth and Mrs. Hauswirth returned September 15 from their eastern trip. After visiting Atlantic City and at the home of President-elect Traendly, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. George Asmus, they proceeded to a Red Men's meeting at Jamestown, while Mr. and Mrs. Asmus came directly home.

At the Horticultural Society dinner September 16 a telephone message was received from P. J. Foley stating that he was prevented from having the pleasure of being present by the greater pleasure of remaining at home to entertain a new daughter weighing eleven and one-half pounds who arrived that day.

Leonard Kill had charge of the arrangements for the Horticultural Society's dinner and supplied the roses for the tables.

Edwin A. Kanst reached home last week after his period of detention in the Philadelphia municipal hospital while recovering from a mild attack of diphtheria. He says they treated him most courteously at the hospital, although they insisted on his remaining with them until fully recovered.

Word comes from Aurora that two Chicago men, Dr. C. H. Stahland and W. C. Bamburger, are seeking to buy land north of that city to build a big greenhouse plant. According to the story as it comes from Aurora, this is to be one of a number of establishments the Chicagoans propose to build about the country.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade seems to improve, but is not as active as it should be. Almost the only business is funeral work, which was quite plentiful last week. Some of the downtown retailers report that transient trade also is looking up, especially since the theaters are open. The wholesalers say that the trade was buying more heavily last week than for some time, and business should increase each week from now on.

In looking over the stock Monday morning, September 16, we find roses plentiful in all grades except of the special. There are too many short-stemmed, which are sold cheap in order to dispose of the large consignments. Carnations are coming in more plentifully; still few

AT THIS, the opening of the new season, we want to emphasize the fact that you need look no farther for a reliable source of supply for all cut flowers. We handle great quantities of stock—everything in season—and can supply all grades. If there is any item on which we are sold out at time of receipt of your order, we shall not fail to visit every house in this market in the effort to get it for you. We are here to see that you get what you want.

GROWERS

OUR OUTLET for good stock is increasing at a very rapid rate, and we have the facilities for handling to good advantage the output of a number of additional growers whose stock is of shipping grade. Growers of Roses, Carnations, Mums, Violets or any other good stock, if not satisfied with their present market, will do well to correspond with us. We have both the shipping and local demand and facilities for taking the best of care of stock, and can offer it in the most attractive shape. Write today.

first-class blooms are seen as yet. Enchantress is the best of the lot, but these are too short-stemmed to bring much.

Asters are as plentiful as ever, with white having the call; many in other colors have gone to waste. Some fine Clematis paniculata is in and sells well. Gladioli are about over for this season. Cosmos is looked for any day. Tuberoses are fine, with good sale.

Smilax, asparagus and other greens are selling well, and the market has plenty for all demands.

Club Meeting.

On the afternoon of September 12 the Florists' Club held its regular monthly meeting, an enthusiastic one. The attendance was some twenty members.

President Irish and his staff of officers opened the meeting and heard reports from all the committees, which were discharged with thanks. One application for membership was received, that of Walter Retzer, of the St. Louis Seed Co. Two new members were elected, L. M. Van Hook, a grower, and D. Bova, a retailer.

President Irish appointed ex-Presidents Guy and Dunford to assist him in the installation. The first officer installed was the new trustee, Charles Schoenle, who promised, with the assistance of Messrs. Smith and Beyer, to make this the banner year of the club in attendance and social features. Treasurer F. H. Weber was next installed and promised to watch the treasury with an eagle eye. Secretary A. J. Bentzen followed, and promised to do his duty to the best of his ability. George H. Angermueller, vice-president, came next, with a promise to never miss a meeting. Then came President William C. Young's turn. He said that, with the assistance of his staff and the members, he will make this the best year in the history of the club. Ex-President Irish thanked the members for their assistance in the last year and spoke very enthusiastically on the future of the club.

The secretary's report showed that the average attendance during the year was twenty-five. The largest attendance at any one meeting was forty, the November meeting, when the chrysanthemum exhibition took place. The treasurer's report showed a healthy balance.

A number of excellent queries from the question box brought forth a lively discussion, in which Messrs. Dunford, Guy, Irish, Fillmore and Fulgraf took part. Before adjournment President Young announced that a lunch, with refreshments and cigars, was in waiting in a near-by café, where a general talk took place.

Various Notes.

Secretary H. C. Irish, of the National Council of Horticulture, reports that a special car will leave Kansas City September 20 to carry those who will attend the big horticultural meeting at the Jamestown exposition, September 23 to 27.

In a letter to the Florists' Club Professor Trelease, of the Missouri Botanical Garden, stated that Edwin Nyden, the club's scholar at the garden, had passed the highest examination and had been accepted to fill out the term of Paul Roper, who had resigned. Young Nyden's home is in Kenosha, Wis.

J. F. Ammann's failure in not attending the club's last meeting was explained by the fact that he is serving on the United States jury at Edwardsville. Next month he will be assistant superintendent of floriculture at the Illinois State Fair. A large delegation from here has promised to spend a day there.

wood, attended the club meeting last week and reported that their stock was all looking fine, both carnations and violets, and all expect a good crop this season. E. W. Guy, of Belleville, also had a good word regarding his young stock.

George Waldbart left Germany for home September 13 and is expected in St. Louis by September 25.

John J. Burke is again open at the old stand, at Sixth and Locust streets. Mr. Burke has a good stand, and reports his first week a good one in funeral work and transient trade.

Park Commissioner Phil Scanlan has asked the city to buy three city blocks, from Chestnut to Market streets and from Fourth street to the river front. This would face the court house and would make a fine breathing spot for the downtown district. J. J. B.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Trade last week was fair. Funeral work still holds out well, and, in fact, that is almost the only kind of business looked for. Roses are coming in more regularly, as the warm weather is nearly gone, and the stock is improving in quality. Carnations are much better. Asters are still coming in heavily, but will soon be on the decrease; they are selling well. There are still large quantities of gladioli on the market. Dahlias are better and selling better, as the cool nights we are having are bringing the stock up to the standard. Greens of all kinds are enough to meet the demands.

The Gardeners' Club.

At the last meeting of the Gardeners' Club plans were made by many to go to the Jamestown exposition to attend the horticultural show, September 23.

An informal discussion of the labor question was held, in which many told their troubles in getting men who are interested enough in flowers to work conscientiously.

The meeting continued till nearly midnight.

Various Notes.

E. Van Reuth, of Hamilton, Md., is erecting a new house.

G. Cook, of Arlington, is still hauling flowers and vegetables to the market. He has named his home Floral Park and reports that a new hotel costing $100,000 will shortly be built near his place.

Mrs. Estelle T. McKay, of Irvington, Md., has over 17,000 aster plants and has given away over 5,000 plants.

J. L. Downin raised a giant sunflower twenty-two inches in diameter and has about 2,000 seeds.

A delegation from the Northeast Baltimore Improvement Association called on James N. Boone to thank him for his care of the Clifton park and the upper part of Broadway square. J. L. G.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Trade has shown some improvement the last week, several weddings, the horse show and a few large funerals helping, but there is no scarcity of flowers. Asters are coming in all colors, and some of them are pretty bad, none of them just what they should be. Roses continue to improve every day, and there is demand for all the good stock.

Various Notes.

The handsomest thing seen in the way of a store decoration was arranged by Mrs. E. A. Williams, for McCreery & Co. About 300 feet of show windows were arranged with green plush, specimen foliage plants and America gladioli. The same flowers and plants were used throughout the store and the effect was elegant. This firm, when making these annual decorations, remove all their own goods from the window and depend on the elegance of the floral display to bring the people inside. From the appearance of things in this place of business they are not disappointed, as nothing more elegant has been seen for a long time.

There has been a small war among some of the street men, who have been cutting prices on asters, and last week they were selling at 5 cents per dozen, and pretty good stock at that.

Miss McKinley is back at her post with Randolph & McClements, after a two months' vacation, and is looking ready for all the rush business that can come.

Albert Lorch was a visitor at the Pittsburgh Rose & Carnation Co.'s at Bakerstown, a few days ago, and reported their stock, as a whole, as in the best

The Market.

Business has been fairly good and flowers have cleaned up better than for some time. Roses are gradually improving, but need cooler weather than we are now getting to give them size. Carnations are increasing in quantity, but are not nearly sufficient for requirements yet. The quality is not yet high class. A few single violets made their appearance this week. They are, however, small and pale. A few cold nights will improve them. Gladioli are still fairly abundant, but will not last much longer.

Asters still dominate the market and are quite abundant at a wide range of prices, some first-class stock bringing $2.50 to $3 per hundred, while small stock has only made 25 cents to 30 cents. Liliun Harrisii and L. speciosum are both in fair supply and there is plenty of cosmos. The early mums should make their appearance in a day or two, but meanwhile the best quality asters will discount them. A few sweet peas are still coming in. Some dahlias are seen, but these are not popular market flowers in Boston.

Club Meeting.

About 150 members attended the club meeting September 19, which opened the fall season, the gathering being a rousing and enthusiastic one. The lecture of the evening, by Dr. R. G. Leavitt, of the Ames Botanical Laboratory, North Easton, on "Hybridization," proved extremely interesting. What takes place after fertilization, the Mendelian law, the probable effects of using double pollen, and other phases, were all touched upon by the lecturer, who used the blackboard to illustrate some of his remarks. A discussion followed and a rising vote of thanks was tendered Dr. Leavitt.

The report of the picnic committee was read and accepted and the committee and prize donors thanked. Prizes of $2, $4 and $6 offered last October for geranium plants to be started at that time, from cuttings, and shown in September, 1907, were competed for by young gardeners and some excellent specimens were shown. The exhibition was further added to by a goodly number of names. Refreshments were served, as usual. Arrangement was made for the coming field day, at Marblehead, with W. W. Rawson & Co., September 21. A special coach for club members will be attached to the 12:44 train at North station. Tickets, free. Other business kept the meeting until quite a late hour.

Various Notes.

Oakes Ames, of North Easton, has disposed of his collection of orchids, the largest portion being donated to Bronx park, New York.

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society will hold its annual exhibition of fruits and vegetables October 10 and 11. The chrysanthemum show, November 8 to 10, promises to be better than any held of late years. The liberal special prizes are proving a great attraction.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Truly might a flower lover in the month of September, A. D. 1907, be pardoned for believing that the initials stood for Asters, Dahlias, instead of Anno Domini. But asters are now on the wane. Really choice stock is none too plentiful, with the ordinary and common grades less superabundant than a week ago. Reports from certain sections indicate, however, that we will have some fine asters for some time to come. Dahlias now rule the market. They are arriving in far larger quantities this week than at any time so far, and the demand for them is improving. The varieties are pretty much the same as those mentioned last week. The quality is excellent. There appears to be a shortage of good whites.

Carnations are still scarce. The quality of the flowers is improving; so, also, is the length of stem. Winsor, Beacon, Enchantress, Rose-pink Enchantress, Boston Market and Guardian Angel are among the better varieties. A noticeable feature in the rose market is the continued excess of small roses, Bride, Bridesmaid and Richmond, of poor quality and short stem, being enormously overdone. Killarney is proving a good warm weather rose. Kaiserins are fine. Beauties are improving in quality, some really good specials being offered.

The orchid market has been strengthened, Cattleya labiata and oncidiums being reinforced by dendrobiums and fancy cyps. Valley is abundant. Choice sweet peas have sold well. Some greens are sold. There is no demand for cosmos. Summing up, it may be said that dahlias, Beauties, Kaiserins, and valley sell best; that the market is dull, but that there has been an increase in the volume of business each week during the last month over that of the week preceding. This increase is less noticeable because of a more than corresponding increase in the receipts of flowers, making prices average low on all but the best stock.

A Pleasing Idea.

The effort to decorate store windows in a way that shall be at once novel, artistic and suggestive of some want which it is designed to satisfy, has rarely been more successful than is seen in a window on the south side of Market street below the Reading terminal this week. This window is designed to show a scene in Holland. Beds of blooming tulips and hyacinths in various colors are painted in oil in the background. To one side are kentias, Holland grown; in front many, many pairs of Dutch wooden shoes of various sizes, such as are used by the bulb growers. These shoes, and also colored glass jars, are filled with hyacinths, tulips, narcissi, etc., each variety carefully labeled and (here the artistic must give way to the practical) priced. The whole effect, when lighted by improved electroliers, is so striking that it was said the Gimbel brothers had called to compliment the Henry F. Michell Co. on the work. The idea was planned and executed by Philip Freud, and to understand its difficulty, I must add, the twenty-eight pairs of wooden shoes were all imported from Holland, to say nothing of the bulbs.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons had the principal share of this work, which is of special interest, as it always closely precedes the active opening of the festive season so earnestly desired.

Various Notes.

William J. Baker is receiving some exceptionally fine yellow daisies, worthy of special mention.

H. H. Battles had the decorations for a large wedding at Mauch Chunk this week.

John Berger and William P. Craig paid a visit to Stockton & Howe, Princeton, N. J., recently. They report that the place has been practically doubled in size during the season and that the stock is in the pink of condition. Bride, Bridesmaid, Liberty, Beauty and Richmond are, I think, the varieties grown. The stock is handled by Berger Bros.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., has returned from a trip south. He visited Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Norfolk, and the Jamestown exposition. Mr. Eschner is enthusiastic about Jamestown. He thinks the exposition well worth a visit, and would gladly have spent three or four days there had time permitted.

George A. Stroblein and family have returned from their trip to Europe.

F. Herbert Steinmetz is building up a nice business at Eighth and Arch streets.

The Philadelphia Cut Flower Co. has installed a new cash register with the latest improvements, which Mr. Hayden says can do everything but speak.

Eugene Bernheimer is receiving fancy long-stemmed Beauties, in quantity, from the Florex Gardens.

W. E. McKissick is looking forward to a prolongation of the aster season. He is receiving exceptionally fine stock of the Ostrich Plume variety.

The Leo Niessen Co. reports a slow but steady improvement in business. The demand for wild smilax is taken for an encouraging sign. The company will this year handle the entire produce of many of our leading specialists in various lines.

J. Stern & Co. have received fresh importations of fancy baskets this week.

John McIntyre is first in this market with chrysanthemums, color yellow.

The dahlia exhibition of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society was held on Tuesday and Wednesday in Horticultural hall. L. K. Peacock, of Atco, N. J., delivered an address Tuesday evening, which was much enjoyed.

W. W. Crawford says that his father's carnations at Secane are in magnificent condition this season, a pleasing contrast to the plants housed last year.

Ralph G. Faust, of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., reports a gratifying increase in the florists' business as compared with each month of last season. PHIL.

THE BLUE DAISIES.

Blue flowers are always welcome, even if of small size and more suited for the rockery than the border, and the globularias meet with favor from the vast majority of those who see them, not only because of their color, but also on account of the pretty globe-shaped flowers. Some are not too small for the front of the border, but the majority really look more at home in the rock garden, where their neat, daisy-like leaves and their heads of flower are welcome when they bloom in summer.

Among the best known is Globularia vulgaris, a good rock or border plant, growing from six to twelve inches high, and giving a plentiful supply of its bright blue flowers from June to August. There is also a scarcer white variety, called Globularia vulgaris alba, which some admire more than the blue, probably because it is not so common, although it can not be called any prettier.

All globularias like a free and open soil, with some leaf-mold among the loam, with also a little grit, sharp sand, and some stones, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine. They must not be allowed to become too dry in summer.

JUST READ IT!

The Florists' Review says in its issue of Sept. 12, 1907:

"The book is noteworthy as showing the rapid development this house has made in the last few years. The pages are 10x13 and the book contains ninety-two (92) of them, printed on the heavy calendered paper, so that the half-tone illustrations show up in fine shape. The C. C. Pollworth Co., including the greenhouses, contains about everything the florists of the northwest require for their season's business. There are also a number of pages devoted to the plant department, others to bulbs, and the body of the book to the supply business, which is rapidly becoming the leading feature with this firm. They handle not only retailers' requisites, but a large line of supplies for the grower."

A YELLOW-LEAVED ASTER.

Among the Giant Comet asters grown by Max Kornacker, at Wehrden on the Weser, Germany, in 1901, one plant attracted attention by its yellow leafage. Seed having been saved from this plant, it was sown for several years in order to test its constancy. The yellow color has remained in the leaves, so that now 90 per cent come true. The leaves of this variety are said not to burn under hot sunshine, as is the case with many variegated ones. The flowers in the type have remained pure white, and they are moderately double, so that the long-stemmed flower is well adapted for cutting purposes, and the plant is excellent for planting in beds, etc.

CLERODENDRON FALLAX.

The dwarf Clerodendron fallax makes a fine decorative plant, and provides a shade of color that is distinct and attractive. Seedlings are preferred by many growers, and these may possibly make the best plants, but cuttings will produce specimens in much less time than seeds permit. The old plants, after a slight rest, if placed in a little warmth, will soon produce cuttings which root readily in a propagating case with an intermediate temperature. Sandy loam and leaf-soil form a good compost, and with clay to fertilize the soil, when the plants are growing freely, fine large heads of flowers may be produced in a 5-inch pot, a size large enough for ordinary purposes. When the plants are raised from cuttings successional batches may be had throughout the year, if the stock is large enough. An intermediate temperature is suitable during the growing period, and when the flower heads appear the plants may be removed to cooler and more airy quarters; a cold-frame during the summer months will suit them. When grown in this way the plants remain in flower for some weeks, and they stand house decoration well, and for this purpose are very useful.

Specimens may be grown to carry several heads of bloom, and these are useful when a mass of color is required, but for light and effective decorations plants grown with a single head of bloom are best, and they are more quickly flowered than those with several heads, says a writer in a London gardeners' magazine.

FALL SPECIALTIES

IN parts of Germany, a condition of the buds of the lilac has been noticed, to which has been given the name bud disease. The cause of the disease has been determined by Dr. R. Laubert to be a mite, so minute as not to be visible to the naked eye, Phytoptus Loewi, one of the gall-mites which are the causes of so many diseases and malformations in plants. This minute creature is impervious to heat and cold, and is capable of existing in the perfect state throughout our coldest winters. The likeliest means for their destruction would be to apply some kind of wash or powder to the affected bushes in the second half of the month of May, when the mite leaves its place of concealment and is searching for a new one.

THE high price that the small farmer is securing for pickles at the different salting stations will cause him to go in heavier for pickles next year and the result will help the seedsmen.

IN the canning district of Maryland the annual glut of tomatoes was on in full force by September 10 and the pack, which had looked to be smaller than usual, now gives promise of meeting market requirements, although the market still is strong.

THE crop of onion seed harvested from the various small plantings throughout the middle west is reported to be large for the acreage. It is thought that it will thresh out heavily and yield a quality of seed something above the average. As has been intimated in this column previously, this addition to the onion seed crop will cut a considerable figure in making up for the California shortages.

SOME of the market gardeners in the vicinity of Chicago are still harvesting onion sets. The smaller growers this year appear to be harvesting more sets in proportion to the acreage planted than are the larger operators. The reason for this may lie in the fact that the smaller growers plant their seed thinner, making it go over more ground. In good years their product runs too large for good quality, but they get more quantity. In an off year like the present one, they usually hit it about right.

VARIETIES OF GARDEN BEANS.

Next to the potato, says W. W. Tracy, Jr., in the introduction to his latest volume, American Varieties of Garden Beans, just published as Bulletin No. 109 of the Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, the bean is by far the most important vegetable of this country. Being sold in the United States under more than 400 varietal names and having at least 185 distinct types, it easily stands first among vegetables in number of varieties and it ranks second in the value of the crop produced. One American seedsman sells every year more than 24,000 bushels of seeds of garden varieties alone.

In Bulletins No. 21 and No. 69 of the Bureau of Plant Industry reference is made to the increasing number of vegetable varieties and to the need of some established standard of excellence for vegetable types. The present publication, which is a continuation of the line of work followed in the bulletins mentioned, is largely the outgrowth of variety tests carried on at Washington, D. C., and in various places in the states of Connecticut, New York, Minnesota, Nebraska, Missouri, California and Washington, says Dr. Galloway, chief of the Bureau. "Considerable assistance was obtained by Mr. Tracy from the publications of the state agricultural experiment stations, and many valuable suggestions were offered by seedsmen and seed growers, several of whom have reviewed the manuscript of this monograph.

"Varieties of garden vegetables are now in such a confused condition and reports of vegetable trials generally are so meager and contradictory that it is usually quite impossible for any but the experienced seedsman to determine whether a vegetable type, unknown to a particular community, is really a new type or a sort already cultivated in some part of the country. Many varieties are probably unintentionally renamed, and much unnecessary experimentation and comparison are carried on every year with sorts which are thought to be distinct, but are really identical."

Seedsmen will find a great deal of both interest and value in the bulletin, which is a volume of 160 pages, with twenty-four plates illustrating side and ventral views of ripe seeds of 112 varieties, cross sections of thirty-six snap and green shell pods, two views each of sixty-five varieties and fifteen leaf types. Each of the five species, into which garden beans naturally divide, is taken up and the varieties described, with a statement of the number of seedsmen listing in 1906, a comparison with similar sorts, synonyms, history and reference to illustrations in the bulletin. Every word is of value as confirming or extending a seedsman's knowledge of his business, and the volume evidences much painstaking work on the part of the author. A catalogue of all variety names in 1906 catalogues is included, with a few words of description and history. Also there is an "artificial key to varieties," arranged on the dichotomous system, now largely adopted by botanists, devised to enable the student to determine the variety name of any bean listed by American seedsmen.

If any seedsman fails to receive a copy of Bulletin No. 109 he should write to the U. S. Department of Agriculture for one. It is worth careful study and preservation in a handy place for reference.

ERFURT SEED TRADE.

Though we have had, on the whole, better weather since the middle of July, we want still more sun and warmth for the maturing of most of our seeds, both in the vegetable and flowering lines. The growers all hope for a long and dry autumn, and some of them say, as the first day of September was a dry and bright day, we may well look forward to good weather for the rest of this month. If this be true, and September proves to be a sunny and bright month, things in the seed-growing business will change for the better. August did much for crops, although the sun did not show itself too much and the nights were rather cool. Nevertheless, a good many different plants show up far better than they did a month ago. The amount of sun and heat we had in August was great enough to bring all things out in bloom very soon and to change the aspect of the fields rapidly.

will begin with the vegetable seed crops:

The crop of cauliflower seeds will be late and very likely good; red and white cabbage, fairly good, in some places inferior; brussels sprouts, broccoli or kale, and kohlrabi, bad; carrots, fairly good, but in some cases bad. Celery plants wintered in the fields are bad, but the ones wintered in pits will be good. Savoy, bad; beets, fairly good; sugar beets, good. Lettuce got spoiled a lot by rain, but crop will perhaps be good. Onions, fairly good; leeks, bad, but in some places fairly good; radish, good; cucumbers, undoubtedly bad; melons, good. Gourds may be good; peas, fair, and beans at the best only fairly good.

Concerning the flower seed crop, it may be said that asters will perhaps be good; Impatiens balsamina, about the same; summer stocks, fairly good; winter stocks, good; wallflowers, fair; hollyhocks (Althaea rosea fl. pl.), very bad; larkspurs, bad; poppy, fairly good; scabiosa, perhaps good; antirrhinum, the same; celosia, only medium; dianthus, perhaps good; lathyrus, only medium; lobelia, up to now, good; petunias, phlox and reseda (mignonette), good. Tagetes suffered much from rain and will only be medium. Tropaeolum and verbenas, good; Viola tricolor maxima, medium; Viola cornuta, good. Bellis wintered all out, plants started from seed last spring, promise to be fair or good. Calceolarias, medium; calliopsis, good; campanula, fair or good; centaureas, perhaps good; convolvulus and cosmos, medium; elichrysum, gaillardias and godetias, perhaps good; helianthus, fair; iberis (candy-tuft), good; ipomaeas, mimulus and myosotis, perhaps good; nicotiana, the same; senecio, good, and zinnias, perhaps good.

This is the outlook for most things at present, but it all depends on the weather. If we get steadily dry and warm weather, everything may improve; if, on the other hand, rainy and dull days set in, the views held at present by our growers out here may have to be revoked.

THE MADSON CROPS.

The M. G. Madson Seed Co., Manitowish, Wis., is reported to have had 2,500 acres of peas for seeds in the county this year. While not an average crop was harvested, quality is good. While peas are the principal crop, a great variety of other seeds are grown. Twenty-five acres were this season in seed and set onions. With a favorable autumn it is expected to harvest 150 pounds of aster seeds. Dahlias, gladioli and roses are grown for the trade in large quantities.

HOLLAND BULB CROPS.

Now that all the early bulb crops have been lifted and dried, shipments have at last been started and are now being pushed with all possible vigor. The general demand being better than was at first expected, all tulips on the hands of the growers have been sold at good prices to the dealers, and no surplus, with the exception of a few of the common late-flowering varieties, is likely to be left. Dutch hyacinths are of fine quality and are clearing off well. Of the French stock there is rather too much in the market. Crocus are being sold at a premium and scillas are also scarce this season. Narcissi have gone up in price somewhat and especially

GRASS SEED CROPS.

Under date of September 6 A. Le Coq
& Co., Darmstadt, Germany, issue their annual report on grass seed crops, in part as follows:

We are sorry to say that it is not a pleasant thing this season to report on grass seeds, as in most cases one has to speak of high prices and a poor yield. Although we were already pretty certain that the crop would not be a good one, any favorable expectations were doomed to disappointment in many cases.
The seed is very chaffy and well cleaned samples are not to be had, unless at high prices.
The wages for collecting the seeds have gone higher, too, and we think it will be impossible in the future, even if there is a good crop, to get our home-grown seeds at the prices we used to pay in former years.

As regards the various species we beg to say that the prospects for Agrostis stolonifera, South German, are not bad and one expects a good crop as regards quality as well as quantity; prices for re-cleaned seed will probably rule just as high as in former years.

Aira caespitosa has turned out to be a medium crop and prices will be somewhat higher.

The same refers to Aira flexuosa.

The crop of Alopecurus pratensis has been good and judging from samples to hand the quality seems to be all right, but wild speculation has brought the prices to an enormous height. There are no old stocks in hand and this and the increased demand will send prices to the extreme.

For some years now we have had a small crop of Anthoxanthum odoratum and this year again we have to report a poor yield, but of good quality. Prices will be higher.

Bromus inermis, which is just now coming in, seems to be of an average crop, but there is already a good demand for export trade, which no doubt will influence the prices.

The crop of Dactylis glomerata in New Zealand has been a third less than last year, but of good quality. We have also reports of a small crop in America and the small quantity saved in Germany has suffered from the unfavorable weather during the harvest. A further advance seems likely.

Early in the season the reports on Festuca ovina and duriuscula were favorable and we thought to get this seed at low prices. However, we found that the yield had been overestimated and the present prices are already above the average prices of last year. Although the color has suffered a little by rain, this has had no influence on the germination and the seed will be of normal growth.

The crop of Festuca elatior (arundinacea) is about one-third smaller than 1906 and the quality is light. For re-cleaned seed much higher prices are asked.

For years past we have not seen such a poor crop of Festuca ovina tenuifolia. The crop of Festuca heterophylla and Festuca rubra is again small.

If one can rely upon the present reports on English and Italian ryegrasses the crop will turn out less than last year and somewhat higher prices will rule.

Owing to disastrous floods in the producing districts little seed of Phalaris arundinacea has been saved.

Poa nemoralis yielded a poor crop.

Poa trivialis is reported to be one-third less than last year, but the quality appears to be right.

It is too early yet to say anything respecting red clover, but not very favorable are the reports on alsike and yellow trefoil, while white clover is offered freely but so far we have not yet seen a nice sample. The crop of sainfoin looks as if it would turn out well.

Reports from some sections speak of a small crop of alfalfa, while others seem to get a good crop as regards quality as well as quantity.

INJUNCTION AGAINST BLIGHT.

Judge Memminger, at Charleston, S. C., has dissolved the temporary injunction issued August 13 against D. T. West, upon application of M. P. Croghan and other truck growers, who set up that their cucumbers were ruined by blight carried through the winter in West's greenhouses, and who asked that he be permanently enjoined from growing cucumbers in his greenhouses. Two days were devoted to the presentation of evidence.

Judge Memminger held that no showing had been made which justifies an injunction to prevent West from planting, as it had not been demonstrated that West cannot pay damages, and because the crops, the damage of which is threatened, do not even exist. He holds also that blight can be prevented in the greenhouse if proper means are employed, and that the farmers themselves may change their opinion about the source of the local blight. His order is of much interest and will be read with close attention. The attorneys of the farmers who plant in the open and are bringing the suit declare that they are going to back their case to the end and are going to appeal to the higher courts.

Judge Memminger's order says in part:

"The plaintiffs have not received a judgment at law establishing the existence of defendant's greenhouses as a nuisance and measuring their damages.

"There is here a very vague allegation that defendant cannot respond adequately in damages, but no proof whatsoever that he can not. Injury to crops is capable of compensation in damages, and is not irreparable, as injury to trees has so frequently been held to be, and upon which fact so many injunction cases in our books are based.

"The crops for which the plaintiffs are seeking protection are not in existence and will not be provided for or planted until next spring (many months hence). Plaintiffs are not, therefore, presenting to the court any present existing right in crops planted or growing, but are seeking this relief tentatively. In fact, even if the greenhouses are closed they may yet change their minds and not be willing to back their present opinion with risking a crop against the general blight which progresses each season from Florida, where it is endemic; and may not plant such a crop at all, and the injunction would prove to have been needlessly obtained.

"In the meanwhile the defendant, if not restrained, can have planted and harvested his fall crop, and if managed as it can be, there will be no blight in his greenhouses when he opens the ventilators in the spring, and consequently, no danger to plaintiffs. The showing is abundant that proper spraying and fumigating will keep the greenhouses free of blight.

"Defendant's business will be suspended and probably permanently impaired. He has a large amount of capital invested in the enterprise, and is operating it profitably, and as a means of livelihood. Under the plaintiffs' view of the case, he must be stopped now six months before his ventilators will be opened; whereas, it may well be that there will then be no blight to be liberated or no crops of theirs to be destroyed.

"It might be that defendant could be protected under an ample bond, which the court would require of plaintiffs, in his behalf if the injunction were continued. But having carefully weighed the 'balance of inconvenience,' and the whole matter upon the showing made along the lines hereinabove indicated, bearing in mind that I am to make

FORCING RHUBARB.

Will you kindly give directions for forcing rhubarb in winter under greenhouse benches or in cellars? I. E. L.

As dry heat is unsuitable for the forcing of rhubarb, you will have to select a bench that has no pipes under it. At least two feet of space will be required from the top of the crowns to the bottom of the bench, so it will probably be necessary to dig out enough soil under the bench to allow for this amount of space. Delay the lifting of the crowns until freezing weather; then dig up the clumps, leaving all the soil on them that will adhere. Leave them on the surface of the ground for two or three nights, but if the thermometer indicates more than 10 degrees of frost cover them over so they will not get too severely frozen.

Place the clumps under the bench just as close as they will pack; the soil adhering will be all the covering required. Get some strong burlap or some such material and make a curtain all around the bench, so as to keep the whole thing dark. Sprinkle frequently to keep moderately moist, but take care not to overdo it, especially if the soil on the floor of the house is retentive, as in this case too much water might lodge around the roots, seeing that they would be practically in a pit.

A cellar is a good place for forcing rhubarb, if it is provided with a means of heating. Without this, even if the cellar is frost-proof, growth would be very slow. The best temperature to maintain is from 50 to 55 degrees, starting a little low at first and increasing as growth advances.

Fuller directions for the forcing of rhubarb in cellars were given in the REVIEW of August 29, page 34.

RAWSON'S HOTHOUSE CUCUMBER

As a forcing Cucumber is one of the largest and most profitable crops of the Market Gardener, it is essential that the very best possible strain should be sown. With this idea in view we have made selections for the past few years from our Rawson's White Spine, which have resulted in a strain about two inches longer and a darker green in color, with a few light spines showing at blossom end. This new strain we confidently believe to be superior to any other on the market. The results we have had at our own greenhouses with the stock conclusively prove the above to be true. ½ oz., 35c; oz., 60c; 4 oz., $1.50; lb., $5.00.

DETROIT.

The Market.

We have been having our Indian summer and it is probably for that reason that business has not picked up as it should this season of the year. Still, indications are that before long things will be rushing again. Many people are dropping in to make inquiries in regard to prices for wedding decorations, and one or the other of the florists will surely get these jobs. Funeral work, also, seems to be becoming more plentiful.

The condition of the market remains about the same. About the best thing in roses is Kaiserin and Killarney—for those fortunate enough to have some. The La Detroits on this market at present are badly affected with mildew; so much so that the foliage is next to useless. Carnations are coming along nicely. Some fairly good ones are arriving daily. The white are still small, but Enchantress, rose-pink Enchantress and Lawson are of pretty good size. Asters are arriving in altogether too large quantities for the good of the growers. Many hundreds must find their way to the waste pile. Even the white ones are overplentiful.

Various Notes.

J. F. Sullivan is still at large. His establishment is cutting daily a large number of fine Killarney roses, which come handy.

Mr. Dykes has just passed through Detroit and reports business as being good. Not only is his business prosperous, but the florists all along the line, he says, had a good summer season.

B. Schroeter has just completed a new front on his store. This gives him much more window space, as well as light in the store.

There is much complaint among the retailers of this city against the lateness of the arrival of the Mount Clemens cut. As this usually does not arrive until about 11:30, it puts the store men to much inconvenience, as well as making many disappointed customers. About two-thirds of the retailers rely on these shipments for their day's supply and the better part of the day is wasted before stock arrives.

Our friend, Robert Watson, is in hard luck. A contractor who built a cellar for him, and has already received his check from Mr. Watson, failed to pay for the brick used and now the company supplying the brick has put a lien on Mr. Watson's property for something like $85. In other words, Mr. Watson will have to pay for the bricks twice.

 see if it would sell some for us. We sent in a small advertisement and in five weeks we were sold out and received orders for 1,000 more than we had. We sent money back to eight different states. When a man gets his offer into the classified department of the REVIEW he wants to be careful or his stock will all be sold and he will have nothing left but empty houses to take care of. The REVIEW is worth dollars a year, instead of $1, to any one in the business. You can use this letter if you want to; it is true. RAGAN BROS.

THE REVIEW will send Smith's Mum
 Manual for 40 cents.

Zanesville, O.

IT DID THE WORK.
We potted up about 6,000 4-inch geraniums as a surplus over the needs of our retail trade to try the REVIEW and see if it would sell some for us. We sent in a small advertisement and in five weeks we were sold out and received orders for 1,000 more than we had. We sent money back to eight different states. When a man gets his offer into the classified department of the REVIEW he wants to be careful or his stock will all be sold and he will have nothing left but empty houses to take care of. The REVIEW is worth dollars a year, instead of $1, to any one in the business. You can use this letter if you want to; it is true. RAGAN BROS.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. O. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 33d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June, 1908.

WORK for better stock and better prices, not for increased production, low quality and cheap sales.

THE dry weather in the east has not helped the nurserymen to get a good season's growth. Western New York has had a summer of drought.

THE Apple Shippers' Association finds that the apple crop east of the Mississippi will be considerably larger this year than last, but in the west it will be much lighter. Missouri, the home of the Ben Davis, has but fifteen percent of last year's crop.

THE American Pomological Society will meet at the Jamestown exposition September 24 to 26. C. L. Watrous, J. W. Kerr, P. J. Berckmans and one or two other nurserymen have places on the program, but most of the papers are by the pomological experts of the Department of Agriculture and the state experiment stations.

WILLIAM A. PETERSON, proprietor of the Peterson Nursery, Chicago, says that Mme. de Verneville is, in his opinion, one of the most wonderful of peonies and that it is not yet recognized at anywhere its true worth by the trade in this country, although in Europe it is held at good prices and only small quantities are to be obtained. It is white, full petaled and incurved. It is one of the best keepers as a cut flower and extremely fragrant.

BERBERIS THUNBERGII.

Hedges of California privet were so badly injured—in fact, frozen to the ground in many sections—last winter, that it is desirable to know what will take its place as an ornamental hedge plant. Berberis Thunbergii stood the winter just alongside hedges of privet and was not injured. Can Berberis Thunbergii be planted successfully in the fall, and if so, about what time?

W. H. H. R.

In answer to the above query, I would say that I have seen hundreds of Berberis Thunbergii planted in the middle of June to replace the same number of plants which for some mysterious reason failed to survive the previous winter. There were few deaths among those planted at the time mentioned. Berberis Thunbergii can be successfully transplanted in the fall and the work of planting may be done any time from the latter part of September till frost sets in. Spring is, however, the best time of the year for the transplanting of Berberis Thunbergii, because there is less likelihood of the loss of the plants than from fall transplanting.

R. R.

LITTLE THINGS WORTH KNOWING

Trees when transplanted into soil that has been thoroughly trenched succeed much better than trees planted in holes when the ground in the immediate vicinity of these holes is hard.

fore the ground gets too cold for the roots which have been injured or cut back to form callosities, from which spongioles can easily push when spring comes.

When the soil is very wet at the time of transplanting, severe pounding or treading over the roots should be avoided. If, however, the soil is dry, moderate pressing by treading or careful pounding will be needed.

When a tree is weak, lanky or top-heavy, staking will be necessary in order that it will not be shaken by the wind to such an extent that it will get injured or perhaps killed before it is enabled to reestablish itself in the soil by fresh roots. When a single stake is used for the temporary support of a newly transplanted tree, care must be taken that the bark will not be injured by its rubbing against the support. To avoid this, a straw band should be twisted once or twice around the tree and the ends of the band plaited two or three times around each other and then tied to the stake

FALL TRANSPLANTING OF TREES.

The recent heavy rains in many parts of the country benefited nurserymen immensely. The soil will now, where such rains occurred, be in good condition for the planting of evergreens, and if the work of transplanting was deferred, it should now be pushed steadily until every one that will be benefited by moving is set out. Although it is a distinct advantage to have as much soil adhere to the roots of evergreens as possible while moving them, it is not a necessity, especially in the case of small stock, but if young trees are moved now without soil adhering to the roots, and the soil into which they are set is dry, it will be absolutely necessary to water after they are planted, in the event of no immediate prospect of rain.

Apart from the time gained by transplanting trees in the fall, it will be found that the work can be carried on much more expeditiously than in the spring, and that for various reasons. In the spring most nurserymen are so busily engaged in the shipping of stock that the work of transplanting is very apt to be more or less neglected.

I do not think it is desirable to transplant deciduous trees without balls of earth adhering to the roots late in the fall, particularly if the ground where they are intended to be planted is not well drained, but I think that such trees succeed fully as well when moved during the latter part of September and up to the middle of October as when transplanted in spring. In moving deciduous trees it is very important, at any time of the year, that every root broken or injured be cleanly cut with a sharp knife or pruning shears, in order that, instead of such roots decaying in consequence of the injury, they will send out fresh roots, which will immediately do service in the sustaining and feeding of the tree. Another very important point is to spread the roots straight from the trunk

THREE FLORISTS' PEONIES

As we contemplate discontinuing this branch of our business, we offer the following Grand Varieties at a price within reach of all. Quotations are for Strong, Original, 3-5 eyed pieces. Large, undivided clumps quoted on application.

Rosea Superba—This combines more points of excellence than any other pink variety. Very strong grower; tall and free flowering. Beautiful deep violet-rose blooms of perfect form and good substance. Late. We especially recommend this to the trade as a commercial pink.

Grandiflora Alba—The Popular Florists' White. Often sold for Festiva Maxima, which, when in full bloom, it closely resembles. Strong, healthy plant; large, fragrant flowers on good stem. Guards flushed pink, also crimson splashed center, but changes to pure, snowy white at maturity.

Henri Demay—Robust grower. Very large and full blooms; brilliant crimson; exceedingly fragrant; late. A most beautiful and one of the best dark-flowered sorts.

FORESTRY AT AMES.

H. P. Baker, professor of forestry at the Iowa State College, has resigned to accept a similar position at the Pennsylvania Agricultural College. He leaves at once, in order to get his work in hand for the fall semester, which opens at the Pennsylvania institution the latter part of September.

Professor Baker was the first instructor to take up forestry work at Ames and has occupied the position of professor of forestry since the department was established, in 1904. His work has been unusually successful. A number of his graduates have passed the civil service examination for positions in the United States forest service in competition with the graduates of the Yale Forest School and other leading institutions.

Professor Baker says he likes the spirit of the west and greatly regrets to sever his connections with the work at Ames, but feels that the large forestry interests of Pennsylvania offer a wider field for labor. The new position also means an increase in salary from $1,800 to $2,500 per year to start with and a liberal appropriation for forestry investigations.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Miss Amy. Luffman, who was seriously injured in a runaway early in August, is only now able to be out. Her mother, who was with her at the time of the accident, was less seriously injured.

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.—Premium lists have been issued of the first annual flower show of the Marin County Horticultural Society, to be held in Armory hall, in this place, Saturday, October 26. Further information may be obtained by addressing T. P. Redmayne, secretary, San Rafael, Cal.

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.—George W. Streater is carrying on some interesting work here in plant breeding. He came here from Ohio only a few years ago, but already has four acres of land planted to choice things and a host of seedlings coming on from crosses made since his arrival. He is working in both ornamental and economic plants, including phloxes, gladioli, roses, strawberries, corn, potatoes and a host of others. This section enjoyed a fall of rain sufficient to wet the ground to a depth of nearly two inches September 3. Last year the first winter rain came in November.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Flowers are not plentiful at present. The asters have almost passed out for this season and chrysanthemums are not yet in their prime. A few early white and yellow sorts are in market, but we can not expect a great quantity of them for several days yet. Roses are as scarce as they have been at any time this season, although several growers are cutting a few Beauties and some fair Brides and Maids are seen. Carnations are a little more plentiful than they have been. There are a good many short-stemmed flowers from the recently planted stock, but in a couple of weeks they will have disappeared. Sweet peas from most of the growers are getting very short-stemmed, and are of little use except in funeral work. Violets have made their appearance, but are not in great demand thus far. They are weak and poor colored and need a few showers to put the proper stiffness in the stems. They cost the stores $1.50 per dozen bunches, each bunch containing about fifty blooms. Japanese lilies are getting scarcer and are in good demand. They have been good paying propositions with all the growers this season. Late flowered amaryllis are in full bloom, and in good demand. They are much better sellers than any of the early sorts. Gladioli are getting scarcer and, except for a few weeks at the commencement of their season, they have not sold very well and have found little usage, except to be left in the shop windows as a decoration.

Various Notes.

Considerable complaint has been registered by the residents of Berkeley about the thefts of plants, both from commercial and private places. H. M. Sanborn had a bay tree valued at $25 stolen from in front of his Telegraph avenue store during the present week.

the agency for the Garden City Pottery Works, of San Jose.

The American Florists are almost ready to move into their new building, situated two doors above the old location on Polk street. This vicinity is rapidly becoming one of the flower centers of the town.

Golden Gate park, under the guiding hand of John McLaren and his assistants, is rapidly regaining its former beauty after a hard siege with several thousand refugees who were encamped on its lawns for many months. Several of the city parks also fared in the same way, but now things are assuming their normal shape again.

The Chinese aster growers complain that this season has not been a profitable one with them. Owing to the changed conditions of the town they have had to market much of their stock in Oakland and other near-by towns, so the extra cost in marketing them, together with the low prices received, has left but little to put on the credit side.

FICUS IN CALIFORNIA.

There are at least ten varieties of ficus that are hardy in central and southern California, and they are of such graceful growth and effective appearance that they should be more generally planted than at present, but, owing to the fact that but one or two species are known to the general public, their scarcity is easily accounted for.

The best known variety is the Ficus elastica. It grows to a height of from thirty to forty feet and makes a good, rugged tree in a few years. It is not quite so hardy as the F. macrophylla, which, although not in such favor as a pot or house plant, is more desirable when planted outside. It is more graceful, has more foliage, grows faster and can be transplanted with greater safety. The first variety mentioned has very leathery leaves, stands considerable rough usage and will grow in any ordinary temperature, all of which qualities are greatly in its favor.

Of the other kinds, F. princeps, a native of Brazil, is one of the most beautiful varieties known. It was originally not supposed to be hardy, but several years' trial show it will grow where the other sorts will. It is not of a rapid growth, but has magnificent foliage, which affects a beautiful bronze shade when young. Quite the opposite is F. retusa, which is also very hardy, but has small, dark leaves of a shining green color, which are closely set along the branches. It makes an excellent sidewalk tree and, like all the others, revels in plenty of moisture.

The F. religiosa is a rapid grower and has peculiar, long-petioled leaves, which sway and shiver in every passing breeze in a very characteristic manner. The leaves are also of a dark, shining nature, and this is one of the prettiest of the family. The tree is sacred to the Hindoos and has proven hardy here.

The varieties already mentioned do not display the habits so characteristic of ficus regarding aerial roots and can easily be kept to a single stem. F. rubiginosa, however, is on the line between these and the banyan trees and emits roots very freely far up the main stem. The leaves are thick, coriaceous, rather small and covered with a rusty tomentum underneath. It adapts itself fairly well to dry locations and is a very effective tree.

The F. Benghalensis is the true banyan tree of India and, when it attains a considerable size, its habit of sending down aerial roots from its branches and forming new trunks from them is well known. This is not so noticeable if the trees are grown in situations that are not warm and moist, although this variety is hardy with us. The leaves are broadly oval, coriaceous, with prominent veins and of a beautiful coppery color, more pronounced in the young leaves. The F. Indica is also one of the varieties of banyan, but is of much less robust growth and the leaves and fruits are much smaller.

It was thought for several years that the climate of California did not favor the development of fruit on the varieties of ficus mentioned, but it is evident now that the only trouble has been that the trees had not arrived at a bearing age, as all the kinds grown here have commenced to mature seed recently, which grows very easily and quickly and makes strong, hardy plants in a very short time.

Club Meeting.

The Indianapolis Florists' Club, which was partly organized a month ago, met on the evening of September 11 at the office of A. Wiegand & Sons. There was a good attendance and fifty names were entered for membership. The fine spirit shown at this meeting speaks well for the future of the club. It is a purely social club and the members all look forward to many pleasant nights this winter. Bowling will be the chief amusement. Officers were elected for the ensuing year, as follows: President, F. Sydney Smith; vice-president, Fred Hukriede; secretary, E. H. Sellars; treasurer, Ernest Rieman; sergeant-at-arms, Geo. Wiegand.

The State Fair.

The state fair was held September 9 to 13 and was a great success in every way. The floral exhibits were good in all the classes for plants. E. A. Nelson made a clean sweep in the other classes. The awards were as follows:

Two baskets, J. A. Rieman, first; E. A. Nelson, second. Two floral pieces, J. A. Rieman, first; E. A. Nelson, second. Collection of roses, E. A. Nelson. Collection of cut flowers, E. A. Nelson. Collection of gladioli, Wm. Hack, first; E. A. Nelson, second. Three bouquets, E. A. Nelson.

Original design—J. A. Rieman and E. A. Nelson tied in this class. Two splendid pieces of work were put up and it took the judge a long time to make his decision. Geo. Stellhorn officiated as judge.

There was also a fine exhibit of dahlias by E. T. Barnes, of Spencer, Ind., which attracted much attention.

Various Notes.

Bertermann Bros. will have an extensive display of dahlias in their store September 26. They hope to have about 500 different varieties. This will be the most extensive display of this flower ever seen in the city.

Everyone is hustling around putting things in shape for cooler weather.

Baur & Smith have finished the glazing of their new addition. All their carnation plants are looking extra well. The experiment of planting with no shade on the glass seems to have turned out well.

The Smith & Young Co., of Cumberland, Ind., is cutting some extra fine roses for this time of year. Besides supplying the local demand, the firm does a good shipping business. S.

CARNATION SARAH HILL, ACTUAL SIZE.

SARAH HILL

The largest free-flowering white carnation ever produced; the form is beautiful and displays the size to the very best advantage; color very pure; texture excellent; stem extra long at all times of the year; a startling novelty, producing flowers with great freedom. Grandest novelty for 1908.

Lawson-Enchantress or SUPERIOR

At last we can give you Enchantress with Lawson color. This is not a sport from Enchantress, but a seedling, but it resembles Enchantress in every respect. Guaranteed to be as we represent it. Every one who grows Lawson or Enchantress will want to grow this variety. Early delivery as yet.

Either variety at $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The last few days of last week showed quite an increase in business. The demand for all kinds of flowers was much greater and the prices made a decided advance. While the demand was greater, the one thing that helped more than anything else was that there was a decrease in the supply of good stock. Good and medium grade asters are now selling well, though the poorer grades move slowly. The cool nights have made a decided improvement in the quality of the roses. Brides are especially in good demand, with American Beauties a close second. Carnations are becoming more plentiful and are selling well. Dahlias and gladioli are in better demand. Lilies of all varieties are good property, and tuberose spikes are selling well. Some fine lily of the valley, grown by George & Allan, reached the market last week and it sold out on sight at a good price.

Various Notes.

Some one tried to force an entrance during the night into L. H. Kyrk's wholesale house. The would-be robber tried to force the door and then broke a window, but was unable to gain an entrance.

Frank Huntsman has not been well this summer and it is hoped that the cooler weather will benefit him. He sent a seedling carnation in from his greenhouses the other day. It had bloomed in the field and it was a monster. The color was white and it had a long, fine stem and extra good fragrance. If it does as well on being housed, it will be a fine thing.

Gus Brunner and wife have returned from a trip in northern Michigan. Mr. Brunner is one of the unfortunate hay-fever victims and he had not been back an hour until it attacked him again.

Weiland & Olinger have increased the floor space of their wholesale house by renting an adjoining store, which they are now fitting up in time for the fall business.

David Knott, manager of the city greenhouses, reports that they are in the best of shape for the fall. The mums are doing extra well and, with the number of varieties that they are growing, a very creditable showing will be made, which, of course, is for the benefit of the public.

E. G. Gillett expects to receive his first shipments of mums about September 25. The varieties will be Polly Rose and Glory of the Pacific. Several large orders have already been booked.

C. J. OHMER.

C. J. Ohmer left September 15 for San Diego, Cal., where he and Miss Alice E. French, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. James M. French, will be married September 25.

NOVELTIES FOR 1908

HARVARD Glowing crimson (the real Harvard color). This variety will take the place of all other crimsons, as it is very free and the blooms are of the finest as to size and quality. It is a very rapid grower and the habit is ideal. Rooted Cuttings, $12.00 per 100, $100.00 per 1000.
FAUST A brilliant scarlet. This variety will replace all of the commercial varieties of this color, owing to its extreme productiveness, many plants last December having 20 buds and blooms to the plant. A fine one for the Xmas trade. Rooted Cuttings, $6.00 per 100, $50.00 per 1000.

DENVER.

The Market.

Since last writing business has shown improvement. The weather has cooled off to some extent, so that the effect has been good. However, it is yet a little early for continued cool weather, and some of the aster growers apparently are afraid of frost by the way they are sending them in. There is certainly no shortage. Roses continue to improve. Brides and Maids are in good cut at present, and quality excellent for so early in the season. Beauties are not any too plentiful; if anything, a little scarce; quality fair. There is a strong call for medium lengths, of which there are about enough to supply the demand. Carnations are not coming in fast, though there are a few, and by the end of this month they will arrive in force. The plants never looked better, which is a good indication of a heavy crop.

Various Notes.

One of the largest funerals ever held in Denver was that of W. B. Felke, the victim of automobile races on Labor day. It took five carriages to bear the flowers to the grave, the floral offerings being among the most numerous ever seen in Denver. A private watchman was left to guard the blossoms at the grave, that they might not be destroyed by vandals.

Among our recent visitors were Emil Buettner and party, of Park Ridge, Ill., who are traveling in a special car on their return from Yellowstone park. They were shown around our city by J. A. Valentine, and were delighted with it.

The Florists' Bowling League met last week and reorganized for the winter, electing J. A. Valentine president and G. H. Cooper secretary. They expect to bowl at the Overland alleys every Monday evening.

John Berry, of Colorado Springs, was a visitor September 15.

J. A. Valentine and O. N. Benson left September 16 for a fishing trip on the Gunnison river.

The Colorado State Fair, just closed at Pueblo, was one of the most successful ever held. The floricultural department was especially good, being under the competent supervision of John Berry, superintendent. The exhibitors from Denver were the Park Floral Co. and W. W. Wilmore, the dahlia specialist; also Harry Berry, in the amateur class. The Park Floral Co. took all the first premiums on plants and flowers, with one exception, also all first premiums on bouquets, designs and mantel decorations, and second premium on table decorations. Mr. Wilmore took first on dahlias. Harry Berry, in the amateur class, took five firsts and two seconds on gladioli, phlox and perennials.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

The Florists' Club.

The Springfield Florists' Club is just completing the first year of its existence, during which the members have become better acquainted, and it is generally conceded that the frequent intermingling has created a better understanding of the mutual needs and aims of the several lines represented.

At the monthly meeting, held September 9, officers to serve for the coming year were elected as follows: President, George H. Mellen, president of the Geo. H. Mellen Co.; vice-president, Charles W. Schmidt, of Schmidt & Botley; secretary, George D. Leedle, secretary of the Leedle Floral Co.; treasurer, Leman Bradford, secretary of the Springfield Floral Co.

These officers will assume their duties at the first annual meeting in October, at which time the standing committees will be announced by the president-elect.

Various Notes.

Harry Reeser is the proud father of a first heir and is trying to figure out which demands the more attention—a babe or a greenhouse.

Gus Schneider, superintendent of the Springfield Floral Co., recently welcomed a new florist as a first addition to his family, and to make sure of the future occupation of the little one is erecting a small greenhouse on his residence lot, in which carnations, etc., will be grown for the local cut flower market. G. DALE.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

At the regular meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society, September 11, there was a small attendance on account of bad weather. The exhibits, however, were excellent and honorable mention was accorded the following:

Lilies, A. McKenzie; smilax and gladioli, A. Jancke; roses, W. Eccles; large tomatoes, John Dromboskie; snap beans, V. Cleres; Asparagus Sprengeri, H. Matz.

Judges were appointed for the fall exhibition as follows: James Ballantyne, of Tarrytown; A. Schultheis, of College Point, and Peter Duff, of Orange, N. J. The dates for the fall show were changed on account of the New York show to November 5, 6 and 7.

At the next meeting, October 9, there is to be a special exhibit of dahlias.

PANA, ILL.—R. O. Henderson has leased the greenhouses and business of Frank Shaffer, who has left town.

ARAUCARIAS our specialty. Watch us grow.

1907 is our 12th anniversary in a successful career in the importation, growing and shipping of those well-known and well admired evergreen decorative plants.

The Araucaria Excelsa, Robusta, Compacta and Excelsa Glauca. Our importation this spring, 1907, has swollen up to the enormous amount of 6,000. More are coming on with the azaleas, Sept. and Oct. By buying now your plants will grow into money 100 per cent in 3 or 8 months. Next in rank come our Nephrolepis or Ferns, of which we have only the best selling varieties. A big lot of Boston, Elegantissima, Whitmani and Scottii. Have 3 large houses full in all salable sizes; all pot-grown, not bench-grown. Our ferns are not forced or grown in shady houses, but were grown in sunny houses; ventilators open day and night. Such treatment makes hardy, stiff fronds and strong, stout plants. Can be shipped 5,000 miles without injury in transportation.

Now is the best time to ship; as you can ship safely by freight.

HORTICULTURAL BOOKS

We can supply any of the following books at the prices noted, postpaid, and any other book at publishers' price.

Pronouncing Dictionary.

A list of plant names and the botanical terms most frequently met with in articles on trade topics, with the correct pronunciation for each. 25 cents

The American Carnation.

By C. W. WARD. Invaluable to the carnation grower. All departments of the business are treated in a thoroughly practical manner. This book is the work of a careful, studious grower of ripe experience. Fully illustrated. $3.50

The Florists' Manual.

By WILLIAM SCOTT. Covers the whole field of commercial floriculture. Articles are arranged alphabetically so that reference is quick and easy. It tells you just what you want to know in just the way you want to be told. $5.00

The Dahlia.

By LAWRENCE K. PEACOCK. A practical treatise on the habits, characteristics, cultivation and history of the dahlia with a descriptive list of all the best varieties. Copiously and elegantly illustrated. 30 cents

The Pruning Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. This is the first American work exclusively devoted to pruning. It differs from most other treatises on this subject in that the author takes particular pains to explain the principles of each operation in every detail. Specific advice is given on the pruning of the various kinds of fruits and ornamental trees, shrubs and hedges. Considerable space is devoted to the pruning and training of grape vines, both American and foreign. Cloth. 530 pages. Illustrated. $1.50

The Nursery Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. A complete guide to the multiplication of plants. The book comprises full practical directions for sowing, the making of all kinds of layers, stools, cuttings, propagation by bulbs and tubers, and very complete accounts of all the leading kinds of budding, grafting and inarching. An alphabetical catalog of about 1500 plants—of fruit, kitchen-garden, ornamental and greenhouse species—with directions for their multiplication. Cloth. $1.25

Handy Manual.

By J. W. JOHNSON. Illustrated with plans for greenhouse heating and ventilating, by a practical steam and hot water engineer of long experience. 125 pages. $1.00

Practical Floriculture.

By PETER HENDERSON. An illustrated guide to the successful propagation of florists' plants. A detailed account of the requisites to success and a clear explanation of improved methods. For the amateur and professional florist. 325 pages. Cloth. Postpaid. $1.50

The Propagation of Plants.

By ANDREW S. FULLER. Illustrated with numerous engravings. Describing the process of hybridizing and crossing and also the many different modes by which cultivated plants may be propagated and multiplied. Cloth. 359 pages. $1.50

Commercial Violet Culture.

By B. T. GALLOWAY. An illustrated, comprehensive and complete treatise on the commercial culture, growing and marketing of violets for profit. Of interest to the amateur as well as the commercial grower. Cloth. 224 pages. $1.50

Gardening for Profit.

By PETER HENDERSON. The standard work on market and family gardening. The successful experience of the author for more than thirty years, and his willingness to tell, as he does in this work, the secret of his success for the benefit of others, enables him to give most valuable information. The book is profusely illustrated. 376 pages. Cloth. $1.50

Cabbage, Cauliflower and Allied Vegetables.

By C. L. ALLEN. An explanation of the requirements, conditions, cultivation and general management pertaining to the entire cabbage group. The chapter on seed raising is probably the most authoritative treatise on this subject ever published. Insects and fungi are given due attention. Illustrated. 128 pages. Cloth. 50 cents

Greenhouse Heating.

HEAT FOR FOUR HOUSES.

We are erecting a range of greenhouses, four in number, for vegetables. One of them is 36x100 feet, and the other three are each 28x100. They measure five feet to the gutters and twelve feet to the ridges. They are all connected and have glass gables at one end. All solid benches. We should like to know how much piping will be required for hot water, to heat to 60 degrees here, in Kansas, with the weather sometimes getting as cold as 15 degrees below zero. Could all the piping be overhead and produce as good results as when the flows are overhead and the returns near the ground? S. B.

Your houses can be heated by placing a part of the radiation on the side walls, and a part over the benches, or on the supporting posts. If lettuce is to be the crop chiefly grown, this arrangement will be quite satisfactory. The pipes above the benches should be about eighteen inches or twenty inches above the surface of the soil. The four houses, if piped with 2-inch pipe, will require fifty-five lines of pipe, eighteen in the 36-foot house, twelve in each of the two protected houses and thirteen in the exposed 28-foot house. A 3-inch flow in each house will be large enough to supply the radiation for each, if water under pressure is used.

A good plan would be to carry an independent 3-inch flow under the ridge of each house and return through the specified number of 2-inch pipes in each building. To balance things up a little, it would be better to use a 3½-inch flow in the 36-foot house, connect the expansion tank to the main return close to the boiler and elevate it twenty feet or more if possible. GRAND RAPIDS.

West Michigan State Fair.

Wet, raw weather, necessitating night firing to keep mildew off the roses, is the kind we have had the past couple of weeks. Last week, while the West Michigan Fair was in progress here, it rained the first part of the week, including Wednesday, the usual big day, and a financial failure seemed to be in prospect, but clearing and warmer weather Thursday brought out a record-breaking crowd, insuring the management against loss. The floral display was ahead of previous years. There were three exhibitors, the Grand Rapids Floral Co., Crabb & Hunter and Charles Chadwick. Eli Cross made the entries, but for some reason did not exhibit.

The floral designs were large and well made. Crabb & Hunter had a broken wheel, made of roses, rubrum lilies and swainsona. It took first premium. Charles Chadwick had a 5-foot crescent and lyre on a stand, the lyre filled solid with pink roses, the crescent with roses fine. Roses also are scarce and unequal to the limited demand. Lilies are plentiful, rubrum being most in evidence. As to asters, they are in oversupply and of good quality. Gladioli, dahlias, etc., are to be seen on every hand.

The prospects for a good carnation crop this winter are fine, as the plants in the bench are the firmest, bushiest, best all-around stock that has been planted in years. Even the plants left in the field are strong, bushy stock, first-class in every respect.

The Crabb & Hunter Floral Co. is taking the skylight glass roof off a 200-foot house containing roses. It makes the houses too dark in dull weather and in winter, encouraging a soft growth. Plain glass will take its place. Skylight or ribbed glass may be all right for a palm and fern house, as some claim, but it is not good for anything else.

Current Comment.

Business has taken a new lease on life. Besides the unusual amount of funeral work, cut stuff is selling well and the wedding season has started off fine. At Gude's three decorations are booked for the coming week. The funeral this week of Colonel Fleming, an old resident, called for a great many large and elaborate pieces. All the stores had some.

The plant of the Washington Florists Co., at Alexandria, Va., is looking fine; everything is at its best. H. P. Dorsett, formerly of the Agricultural Department, is in charge of the place.

There is some talk of the florists going to the Jamestown fair as a club.

A worm, all colors of the rainbow, from half an inch to two inches in length, has damaged thousands of dollars' worth of ferns in Anacostia, D. C. It thrives on the remedies that will destroy other pests. The Agricultural Department has promised to send an expert over to see what can be done. In a very short time the worms make a fern house look as if visited by a hail storm.

Geo. Shaffer, the Gude brothers and their families, and F. H. Kramer are doing the Jamestown show with the local Shriners.

Violets have made their appearance.

The Market.

We can truthfully say that business has increased the last two weeks and bids fair for a good fall trade.

Red roses and Beauties are selling ahead of the other stock, but what there is all seems to go, except the asters. Asters are always a drag, on account of the many shorts which come in. Asters have been very good of late, but heavy rains have put a damper on the good stock. Gladioli have found a ready sale each day and quantities have been sold. All the colors seem to go alike, no special color getting the call.

The first violets of the season were seen last week, but violets at this season are not what they are in winter, for they are small, of poor color and in little demand.

Geo. W. McClure, Jr., has become quite an enthusiast of late in the motorcycle craze. His business demands his attention in many places and there is no quicker way of reaching them than this.

Mums in this section all seem to be in fine condition, but there are very few grown around here, most of the stock being shipped in.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

EARLY VARIETIES.

The grower who has many early varieties planted is now praying for an early frost. The eastern markets at present are filled with asters, dahlias and such outdoor flowers, and while one grower confesses to having received $6 per dozen for Montmort last week, it is a safe bet that the quantity marketed was limited. Aside from the novelty of the thing, the demand for chrysanthemum flowers in September is limited until some fine morning a killing frost sweeps the market almost bare of stock; then the buyer gets hungry and the mum once more comes into its own. We usually look for a frost in the vicinity of New York around September 25, and when we get it, as we did last year, the man with the early varieties reaps his reward. When we do not get it, and the mum has to meet the aster and dahlia competition till well into October, the prices received are not particularly alluring.

Monrovia and Montmort are now in shape to cut at almost any time, and Pacific and Polly Rose are close behind. Before we know it, almost, we will be once more in the thick of the fray. Two other varieties that are not grown so much as they might be for early flowers are Mrs. T. W. Pockett and October Sunshine. They can both be got in by the first week in October if handled on the early bud and will come as large again as Monrovia.

October Sunshine is very susceptible to spider and should be closely watched when the bud is swelling, but in this respect it does not differ from Jeanne Nonin, W. Wells or several other varieties. Why spider should find an affinity in certain varieties more than in others, no one appears able to say, but often I think the grower can find the reason in his own carelessness. Some varieties have a habit of curling their leaves inwards, and it is very hard to keep the underside of those leaves free from spider. A superficial spraying never touches them, and before one knows it the spider has woven webs all over the bud and the flower never develops as it should.

The early kinds—in fact, chrysanthemums generally—are looking in first-class shape this year, and if the fall fogs only keep away we should see some fine stock at the shows. It is years since I have seen benches so uniformly even and good.

Cultural Notes.

Be careful in spraying now, as the buds are swelling rapidly on the mid-season kinds. So long as the husky covering is unbroken, water does not harm the bud, but when the petals begin to show in embryo, do not let any more water near the bud if you can help it. The petals forming first on the outside make a receptacle in the center that holds the water, and the consequence is that the bud rots and the labor of months is lost. Some kinds, owing to the shape of the bud, will hold water more than others, and among them I would include white and yellow Eaton, white and pink Duckham, E. J. Brooks, President Viger and Rose Lawrence. Drip from the ventilating sash and leaks in the house cause more loss of buds than the careless grower has any idea of.

As the nights run cool and the thermometer outdoors runs down near the freezing point, it is sometimes necessary to run a crack of heat through the house. The thermometer should not be allowed to run below 45 degrees and it is not wise to close the house tight to keep the temperature up to the desired mark. Run a little heat through the house and keep the ventilators open several inches. This will give a dry atmosphere, just what the opening buds require. A damp, clammy atmosphere is above all things to be avoided.

Do not, in using heat, however, go to the other extreme and use too much. It is sometimes a temptation, if one has a good bench of early flowers that could be sold at a good figure if they were open, to run the house warm and push them along. The chrysanthemum refuses absolutely to be forced. I have experimented with batches of plants in night temperatures from 60 to 70 degrees and the flowers would open first in the cool, airy temperature, running 45 to 50 degrees at night.

Chrysanthemum weather is cool nights and clear, crisp days, and when we get these one can almost see the flowers develop.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

PRIMULA POISONING.

Several subscribers having recently written as to having been poisoned by handling Primula obconica, we reprint herewith notes as to remedies which have been published when the question has previously been under discussion.

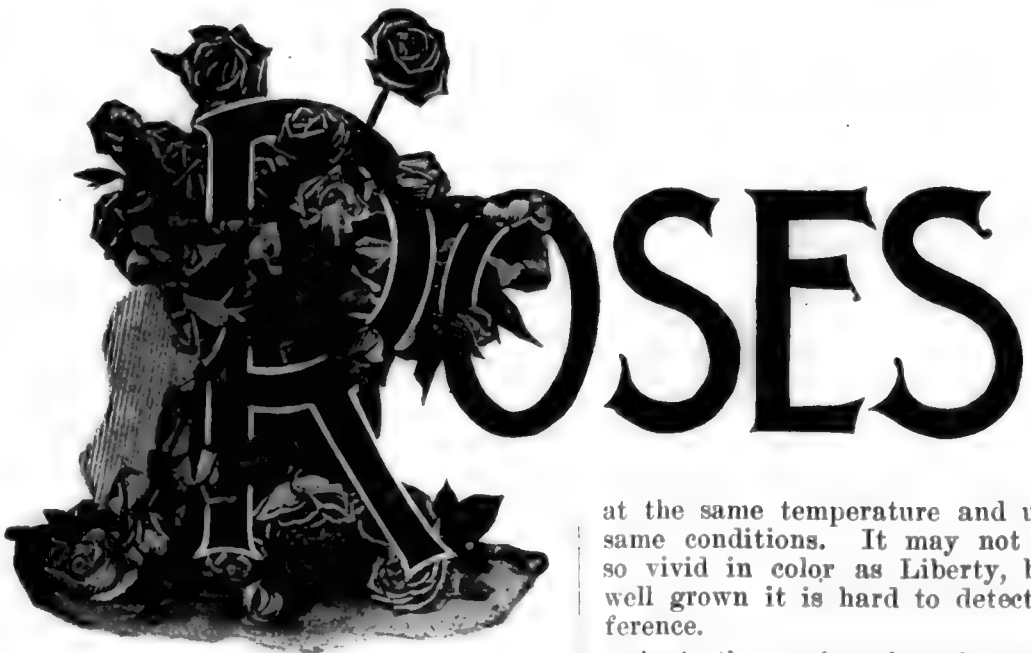

One reader writes: "As to a remedy for poisoning by Primula obconica, would say I have been poisoned several times. I used Luytie's Pinus ointment as a local application and sulphur and cream of tartar to purify the blood. I used one-third cream of tartar and two-thirds sulphur, mixed well. Dose, one teaspoonful every morning in milk. Also take good nourishment. I have never known it to fail."

Another says: "Tell the sufferer to try good thick sweet cream well and frequently rubbed on as a lotion. This has with us proved a sovereign remedy."

A Connecticut reader writes: "It seems to me that the action of Primula obconica poisoning is similar to that of the poison ivy. The cure in both cases, as far as my experience goes, is a free application of tincture of blood-root. Apply the tincture with a sponge or clean cloth to the parts affected. I have known of several cures by this tincture where the poisoning has been caused by either the ivy or the primula."

"A few applications of peroxide of hydrogen gave me relief," writes a Pennsylvanian.

An alcohol solution of sugar of lead is recommended by the Department of Agriculture as an antidote for rhus poisoning. It will probably cure primula poisoning as well. An application of the juice of Impatiens fulva is said to cure rhus poisoning.

ROSES FOR TEXAS.

Please tell me what varieties of roses, including all colors, will be best adapted to growing under glass in Texas. Would grafted or own-root stock give a beginner at rose-growing the better results?

TEXAS.

The most profitable and easily managed roses for culture under glass for a beginner are, for white, Bride and Ivory; for pink, Bridesmaid and Mme. Abel Chatenay, and for light pink, Golden Gate. For red there is no rose at present under cultivation which has proved so accommodating to culture under glass as Richmond. This is as easily handled as Bride or Bridesmaid and does well at the same temperature and under the same conditions. It may not be quite so vivid in color as Liberty, but when well grown it is hard to detect the difference.

As to the merits of grafted stock over own-root stock, it entirely depends on the condition of soil and climate. When the soil is a heavy, loamy clay, requiring a small amount of feeding during the winter, own-root stock thrives well and produces crops in paying quantities and of first-class quality. Where the soil is of a poor quality, requiring heavy feeding during winter, grafted stock would be the most profitable, for the reason that the Manetti stock possesses more fibrous roots, which cover a larger area and are more active and vigorous than stock on its own roots and can consequently handle more artificial food. It is a wise plan to try both kinds of stock side by side where conditions are equal before discarding own-root stock.

RIBES.

THE RETAIL

FLORIST.....

A GARDEN SHOP.

William Watson & Sons, Dublin, have recently opened a new store which is in line with the most advanced ideas of retail store arrangement, but according to the Irish Times: "Messrs. Watsons' new shop is quite unique so far as Dublin is concerned. In fact, 'shop' becomes a misnomer, for in the absence of counters and their usual associations, these premises would better be described as a large floral room, with artistic garden furniture shadowed by spreading palms. They are most aesthetically arranged, with a trellis work screen dividing the premises into two parts, and the marble fountain which plays in the center of this fragrant place heightens the sensation of constant freshness which pervades it."

HART'S HANDY HANDLE.

One of the most attractive novelties at the Philadelphia convention of the S. A. F. last month was a device designated as Hart's Handy Handle. That the judges took the same view of it as did the trade in general was shown by the fact that it received the only certificate of merit granted to an exhibit in the supply department, there being only three certificates granted in the whole great trade exhibition. The retailers were especially impressed with the device, for it appeals directly to the man who has to decorate a large number of plants and do it in a short time. The handle is designed for use with an ordinary flower pot, by its mere attachment converting the pot into a basket. The accompanying illustrations show such a transformation. The smaller cut shows a Crimson Rambler rose in a pot decorated with dark green crepe paper and tied with ribbon. The other illustration shows the same plant with the handle attached to the pot and decorated with a spray of Crimson Rambler and a ribbon. The handle closes over the edge of the pot and grasps it below the collar, is quickly adjusted, and the heavier the plant the tighter the clutch.

The device is the invention of George B. Hart, of Rochester, and was used last spring by several of the Rochester retailers. Salter Bros. say they used several hundred of them on azaleas, rose plants, etc., and found they sold well, the expense being much less than in the use of baskets. H. E. Wilson says he found the use of the handle, with a little chiffon or ribbon, increased the value of the plants from fifty to 100 per cent. Mr. Hart has patented the device and is preparing to put it on the market through the supply houses.

THE NEWPORT EXHIBITION.

The autumn exhibition of the Newport Horticultural Society was held in Masonic hall, Newport, R. I., September 17 to 19. It was expected that this would have been a good show, but no one had any idea that it would turn out to be such a tremendous success as it proved to be. The classes, which were unusually numerous, were nearly all filled, while in a number there were as many as twelve entries. The exhibits were almost without exception of unusual excellence. This autumn show is still much of a dahlia display, but this year the extraordinary interest taken in exhibits of plants and other cut flowers, while detracting nothing from the magnificence of the display of dahlias, rendered the latter a somewhat less predominating feature than in recent years.

Dahlia growers of the commercial class from Newport and other localities exhibited in large numbers, prominent among them being W. W. Rawson & Co., of Boston; H. F. Burt, Taunton; W. D. Hathaway, New Bedford; Mrs. H. A. Jahn, New Bedford; William F. Turner, New Bedford; the Star Dahlia Gardens, Providence; Arthur B. Wordell, Westport, and William H. Richardson, New Bedford. Local commercial men were well represented by the exhibits of E. S. Manuel and Sisson & Thurston, the latter being successful in winning first premium in the class for commercial growers. William H. Richardson was awarded the society's silver medal for the best seedling cactus dahlia, and James Robertson won the prize offered for the best collection of seedling dahlias.

Although as far as Newport is concerned nothing has as yet shown itself an equal to Katherine Duer as a decorative dahlia, the new yellow seedling of this type exhibited by A. H. Wingett, of Lenox, and named by him Charles Lanier, is in many respects the best dahlia of recent introduction. It was awarded a certificate of merit.

James Robertson was again the most successful exhibitor all through, taking nine first prizes.

Gladioli were never before exhibited in quantity or quality in any way approaching what was seen at this show. B. Hammond Tracy, of Wenham, Mass., made by far the largest and most varied exhibit of these. He was awarded the society's silver medal. John Lewis Childs was also an exhibitor of gladioli, but not in such large numbers as on former occasions.

Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, exhibited water lilies, caladiums and Nephrolepis Amerpohlii and N. Todeaoides, receiving a well-merited certificate of merit. W. A. Manda showed a miscellaneous collection of plants, prominent among them being Dracæna Mandaiana, awarded a certificate of merit. Dracænas Black Beauty and Bronze Beauty were also noticeable novelties in this collection, as also were plants of variegated privet.

The F. G. Conine Nursery Co., of Stratford, Conn., showed a collection of tea and hybrid tea roses, receiving a certificate of merit.

The classes for groups of foliage and flowering plants brought the largest number of entries in the history of the society, eight groups being staged. For the first time a florist, in the person of Oscar Schultz, took first in the class for a group of foliage plants, Colin Robertson being second and John Marshall third. Mrs. Robert Goelet was first for palms, ferns and flowering plants, Mrs. Astor second. Oscar Schultz was first for a group of ferns, and E. J. Berwind second. The class for a table of foliage plants was again keenly contested by four exhibitors. David McIntosh was first, John Marshall second and Colin Robertson third. James Boyd was first for six dracaenas in 8-inch pots. Colin Robertson was first for specimen crotons. James Robertson was first for specimen cycas. Colin Robertson was first in all classes of specimen palms, with Oscar Schultz a close second in one with a fine specimen of Phoenix Røbelenii.

Both fruit and vegetables were exhibited in larger numbers and of better quality than at any previous show.

The first for annuals was won by Joseph Gibson, with John Watson first for perennials. James Boyd was first for gardenias. Mrs. Goelet took first for carnations. Hugh Williamson and his son James took first and second respectively for miniature flower gardens.

The chief attractions on the second day of the exhibition were the made-up baskets and centerpieces. For the best centerpiece of dahlias, Gibson Bros. were first, Oscar Schultz second and John Marshall third. For a basket of dahlias, Oscar Schultz was first, Gibson Bros. second and John Marshall third. For a basket of other flowers, James Boyd was first with American Beauty roses, John Marshall second with allamandas and Gibson Bros. third with Killarney roses. In the class for six vases of cut flowers James Boyd was first, Colin Robertson second and Joseph Gibson third.

On the third day of the exhibition the interesting attractions were the table decorations, and what made these of unusual interest was that several society ladies entered the lists and decorated their own tables personally, with the result that Miss Wetmore, daughter of Senator Wetmore, was first for a decoration of outdoor flowers. In the class for a table decoration, for which Mrs. Berwind offered liberal premiums and specified that the exhibits must show originality, there was only one prize awarded, to John Marshall, for a unique arrangement of allamandas and Adiantum Farleyense. In the other class for table decorations, Oscar Schultz was first, Colin Robertson second and John Marshall third.

The attendance at this show was far in excess of any show given by the society in recent years, doubling that of the July show and the autumn show of last year combined.

Nephrolepis Amerpohlii was generally conceded to be the finest of that type of fern yet introduced, while its running mate, N. Todeaoides, because of its more upright growth and robust center fronds, was thought to be able to stand more hard use and syringing in its cultivation.

Several officers of the New England Dahlia Society made their presence known by the lodging of a protest against an award of the judges. The protest was found to be well founded and the judges promptly reversed their decision. The judges, visitors, committee and many prominent exhibitors dined at the Perry House on the opening day.

The judges were Alexander MacLellan, John T. Allan and Daniel Coughlin.

Use of Night Soil.

I do not agree with Mr. Totty, in the REVIEW of September 12, as to the use of night soil. I have used it for a number of years with good results. My method is, use a pailful of soil to fifty gallons of water. Put the soil in a bag, drop the bag in a barrel and turn on the hose. In that way there is nothing but the liquid used. On a bright day the odor is gone in a few hours. J. G. W.

Remedy for White Fly.

In an attempt to kill off sow bugs I accidentally found a remedy for the white fly. I mixed flour and sugar and Paris green and put it on the sides of the benches, and I noticed that as the mixture got soft and the sugar melted the white flies swarmed around it and fed, and soon they all disappeared. That was last spring, and I have not seen any since. I tried corn mixed with sugar and Paris green for the sow bugs, but they do not touch it, eating only the wheat flour. They eat but once.

I hope that this little item will help some others, for I always find the REVIEW helpful, and "Give and take" is my motto. J. G.

GUANO.

Guano, a corruption of the Spanish huano, meaning dung, is, as everybody knows, almost entirely derived from the excrement of seabirds deposited in a hot and rainless country. It has been kept so dry that in the absence of one important condition for fermentation—moisture—it has only very slowly decomposed through centuries, and, being covered up with sand and other debris, has been remarkably well preserved and the loss of nitrogen prevented. In some cases the deposits are, or were originally, a hundred feet or more thick. Its introduction into England was in 1840, and it created a sensation in gardening circles. It was then, indeed, a manure to conjure with, containing, as it generally did, from fifteen to twenty per cent of ammonia, or nearly as high a percentage as nitrate of soda. But there was a limit to the supply of material of this high quality, and the result has been that the imports, which were about 200,000 tons in 1850, are now, in some years, less than 20,000 tons, according to the Gardeners'

Magazine, "London." Still, there are almost numberless grades of guano on the market at the present time, not only from Peru, whence it was first introduced, but from several parts of the South American coast, from islands in the Pacific, from Southwest Africa, etc. Some of the guanos imported today are of quite recent origin, some even being collected annually after the birds' breeding season. Guano is the basis of most of the manufactured fertilizers of the present day, various chemical fertilizers being added to it in the manufacturing process.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Callas.

If your callas are still outdoors, it is time to get them under glass. Frost so far has not visited us, but cannot be much longer delayed. Callas should have all possible sunlight and a night temperature of 55 degrees to achieve best results. They will, however, do well 5 degrees cooler or higher, and in midwinter the higher figure will assist in flower production. The pots should now be getting fairly well filled with roots and an increasing water supply will be required. It is yet a little early to commence feeding. When using stimulants be sure they are moderately weak for a time. Callas will stand an abundance of liquid food later in the season, when the pots are matted with roots. Spray the plants overhead on bright days and fumigate to keep down insect pests.

Lilium Longiflorum.

Lilium longiflorum is arriving in quantity now and should be potted as soon as possible after the bulbs come to hand. The general plan, and the best one, is to use 6-inch pots, placing one bulb in each. Some growers start the bulbs in 4-inch pots and later shift to the larger size. This plan involves considerable additional work and we have failed to find any special advantage in it. Another plan is to just cover the bulb in the 6-inch pots and leave a space of two inches for top-dressing after the flower stem is a few inches high. This also has its disadvantages, for the new soil may appear sufficiently moist, while the lower portion is too dry. The best way is to cover the bulbs two inches deep and allow a fair margin for water, and to water rather sparingly until the pots are well filled with roots. Better to give too little water than to have the soil in any degree soggy. Under the latter condition the roots will surely rot, whereas little harm is done if the soil becomes fairly dry. A great many of the failures in lily growing are due to overwatering in the early stages of growth, and diseased stock is frequently not the fault of the bulb dealer at all, but of the grower.

After potting, place the lilies under a bench in a cool house, shed or cellar and cover the pots with excelsior or moss to keep them from drying out too rapidly. Do not water until the soil becomes quite dry. A few plants may need moisture, while the main batch will not require any. Easter comes much later in 1908 and there is yet ample time to pot up longiflorums for that occasion. The average retailer, however, can always utilize a few stalks for his home trade and it is well to bear in mind that each year more lilies are too late rather than too early for Easter.

Lilium Speciosum.

Where retarded bulbs of that useful lily, Lilium speciosum, were potted in July for winter blooming, the flower stems will now be several inches high and the pots becoming well filled with roots. For Christmas trade this lily is particularly valuable and an effort should be made to get in as large a percentage as possible at that time. Do not give the bulbs a warm house. They do not take kindly to hard forcing, a minimum of 55 degrees being sufficiently high. A frame or cold house will answer for a few weeks yet. Give them full sunshine and do not allow green aphids to secure a foothold on the shoots. A little tobacco dust will keep them in check.

Poinsettias.

Poinsettias in the benches are now making rapid growth and if some support has not yet been given them they are liable to become bent and broken, being quite brittle. Do not afford a high night temperature yet; 50 to 55 degrees at night will answer. This can be increased a few degrees as the bracts begin to show, to assist in their proper development.

Pots and pans will need careful watering. An oversupply will quickly result in yellowing foliage and there is little beauty in a leafless stem with a scarlet bract at the top. The last pans should be made up without delay. Even these will produce nice little bracts if properly cared for. A little liquid manure may be afforded any which have well filled the pots or pans with roots. Once a week is often enough and only mild doses are needed. Soot water will help to green up the foliage on any which may have become a little starved.

Myosotis.

If you put in a batch of myosotis cuttings as suggested some weeks ago, they will be nice little plants by this time. Probably you can find space along the front of one of your benches for a few. This is not much of a market flower, but works in nicely in designs, while some of your customers may fancy a bunch of forget-me-nots in preference to carnations and violets. Myosotis is speedily ruined by aphids. Watch the under sides of the leaves for any signs of it. Drop some tobacco dust among the plants as a preventive and fumigate if it gets a foothold.

Chinese Primroses.

If you want some Chinese primroses in bloom for Christmas, they should now be removed from the frames, in which they have been growing for some months, to a cool and airy house. A little shade will be needed to break direct sunlight from falling on the plants. The temperature should not exceed 50 degrees at night and a dry atmosphere is preferable to a moist one. The plants should be in their blooming pots by this time and the earliest batch will have the pots nicely filled with roots. Water must be carefully given. Use the watering-pot rather than the hose. It may take more time, but you will find it pays. Space the plants so that their leaves do not crowd each other and do not spray overhead after this date. It is yet too early to commence feeding.

Rubber Plants.

Rubbers have done well outdoors this year, but it is risky to leave them exposed much longer, even in lath frame protections. The chilly nights will soon affect the plants, hardy as they are. At this season we are tempted to leave many plants outdoors longer than we really ought to do on account of the pressure on available bench-room. If you have frames with requisite headroom, you can hold your rubbers in them until the earlier chrysanthemums are out of the way. A cool house is all they need, unless your stock is undersized and you want to give it some heat to make it of a more salable size.

Ventilation.

September, as usual, has furnished us with a wide range of temperature, varying from the 90 degrees to freezing. Considerable judgment is needed to give ventilation properly. Little fire heat will yet be used by the majority, except for roses and some of the palms or ornamental foliage plants. Frequently cold nights will succeed hot days. The general impulse is to close the ventilators to keep up the temperature. Unless a trifle of fire heat is at command, this is the very worst policy. Better keep on a fair amount of air and avoid a cold clamminess, such as is always found in a tightly closed house without fire heat. Temperatures are yet too variable to permit of keeping exact night temperatures. They must vary according to the weather. Never mind if your thermometer runs a few degrees low in the mornings if you have a fair amount of ventilation on. On hot days close the side ventilators and open them in the evening. Top ventilation only will be needed in a short time. If a damp, cloudy spell of weather arrives it will pay to turn on a little fire heat, leaving the ventilators well open. The question of ventilation is an all-important one and chapters might be written upon it. Blessed are the men in your employ who attend to it intelligently. They are well worthy of their hire, for the use of even a little judgment may materially increase your profits.

Brief Reminders.

Except in the case of recently lifted stock, foliage on all plants should now be dry at nightfall. A moisture-laden air will speedily breed rust and various bacteria.

Give geranium cuttings abundant ventilation and full sunlight. Do any watering early in the day.

Now is the time to lift, divide and replant almost all kinds of hardy perennials. The earlier the work is done the better will be the results next year.

Keep sweet peas well ventilated. The early crop will need supporting strings, if these are not already given.

Lift and pot crotons, dracenas and any other colored-leaved plants of a tropical nature. Keep warm and close until established, spraying several times daily in bright weather.

Pot up plants of Campanula pyramidalis for flowering in July and August next year.

Keep genistas trimmed into shape. Cuttings will root freely now in a cool house.

Hollyhocks, pansies, violets, digitalis and other biennials or perennials will now be fine stocky plants. Keep them free of weeds and the ground well cultivated. It is too late to sow seeds of these for flowering next spring and summer.

Pot on schizanthus before they become potbound and make a successional sowing of seeds for early spring flowering.

Cyclamens are now growing rapidly. They will do in frames for some time yet, if greenhouse space is at a premium.

GLOXINIAS AT SPRING BROOK.

The gloxinia is one of the best and most useful of our greenhouse plants. Its culture is easy if close attention is paid to the few necessities of the plant, and it will pay to provide some good plants for another season. The house of gloxinias shown in the accompanying illustration was grown by William F. Lyons, foreman gardener for R. D. Foote, Spring Brook Farms, Morristown, N. J. Not all the plants in the house show in the picture. There were 280 plants altogether, each plant carrying fifteen flowers, on the average. Mr. Lyons describes his cultural method as follows:

The seeds of gloxinias should be sown in a warm temperature early in February, in pans or shallow boxes containing a finely sifted mixture of peat, leaf-mold and silver sand in equal proportions. The seedlings should begin to appear in about ten days, when great care must be exercised in watering, or they will damp off. In fact, success with these plants throughout the year depends largely upon the care in watering, even in their most active growth. I always water with a can, taking care not to water the foliage, though they like a warm, humid atmosphere during their growing season.

As soon as the seedlings can be handled they should be potted singly into thumb pots, and grown on rapidly, using in subsequent shifts a mixture of two parts leaf-mold, one part fibrous loam and one part peat. The plants must be well shaded from sunlight, and placed in a position free from draughts. The seedlings should begin to flower by the second week in August, when they should be given an abundance of air and grown at a temperature of about 60 or 65 degrees.

After the flowering season is over the leaves will begin to mature, when watering should be gradually withheld. As soon as the leaves have all ripened off, the pots should be stored away in some convenient place for the winter, in a temperature of about 45 degrees, giving just enough water to keep the tubers from shriveling. About February these tubers will show signs of growth again, when they should be shaken out, repotted in small pots just large enough to hold the tubers, and repotted as the season goes on, until they have been put into sixes or sevens, when they should flower, giving the same treatment and using the same compost as described above.

HYDRANGEA OTAKSA.

The illustrations on pages 8 and 9 are from recent photographs made at the residence of J. A. Foster, at Warwick Neck, R. I., where James Burke has charge of the gardening. One of the illustrations shows the drive, looking toward the house, with Hydrangea Otaksa on either side. The other pictures are of specimen plants. These plants are all set in the ground and stay outdoors all winter. In the autumn they are turned on the side and covered with soil.

The larger illustration, in which Mr. Burke stands beside one of his plants, serves to give an idea of the size of these hydrangeas. This plant is about seven feet high and the same distance through. It was planted four years ago from a 12-inch pot. Mr. Burke says the flowers on this plant were pink in 1906, and this year are blue, though nothing has been used in the soil which would account for the change in color. The other plant is a more perfect specimen, the flowers being more evenly distributed. The plant is over six feet high and about seven feet in diameter. It has been literally covered with flowers, which were so numerous that it was almost impossible to get an accurate count of them; there were several hundred. The flowers on this plant are pink this year and were blue last year.

Hydrangea hortensis var. Otaksa is the greenhouse hydrangea, for it is not hardy outdoors in the north without careful protection. It is ordinarily seen in tubs on lawns and is one of the finest of plants for the purpose. Late in autumn, when the leaves have fallen after light frost, the plants are removed to a frost-proof cellar and kept rather dry until spring, when they are repotted and the growths cut back. During summer a liberal supply of water should be given.

Handsome pot plants for spring sales can be grown in little more than a year. Old plants, given a little heat in winter, will give an abundance of cuttings in February and March. They root quickly. Pot on till June. Pinch out the tops. During summer plunge outside where drainage will be good. They have to ripen the growth, and most growers leave them out until after early frosts to do it. They should be repotted in time to be reestablished before frost. Keep cool in the greenhouse until January, when liberal treatment, with 50 to 60 degrees of heat, will give plants in flower for Easter.

BREEDING AND PROPAGATION

Closely Related Subjects.

The coupling of these two subjects seems eminently proper, as the present situation, especially with regard to the carnation, is that the breeders are yearly producing new and better varieties, and the grower is just as rapidly destroying them by improper methods of propagating and growing.

Perhaps a short summary of the extent, or, better, the limitation, of the writer's experience may be of use in estimating the value of any ideas advanced in this paper. For some eighteen years I have been actively engaged in growing cut flowers for market purposes, largely carnations and chrysanthemums, and for the last thirteen years have been interested in the breeding of carnations, with no very striking success so far as the putting out of phenomenal new things is concerned.

The Commercial Method.

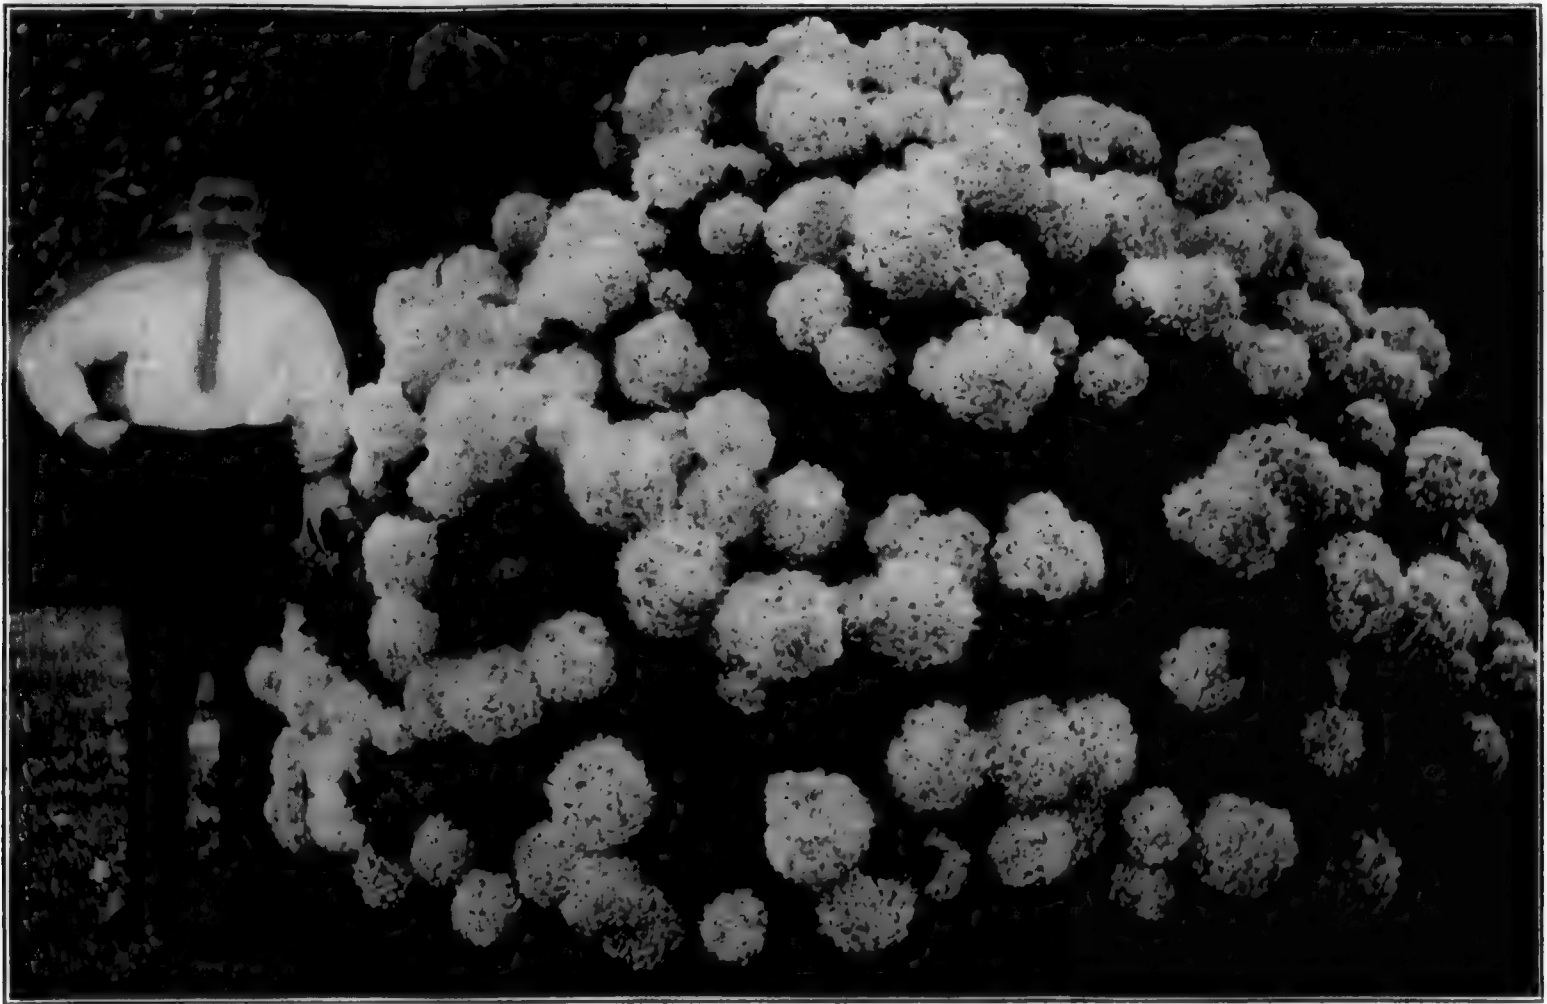

The work has been conducted strictly from the commercial standpoint and, like all work of this kind conducted from this standpoint, has but little value in a scientific way. Questions of economy, the saving of time, labor and greenhouse space, compel the dropping of any line so soon as it shall appear not to offer reasonable chances for gain. We cannot study retrograde or degenerate movements. Failures—that is, undesirable types—are at once destroyed and replaced by what seems to give more chance of gain, and no proper study is, or can be, made of the causes of the retrogression or degeneracy. This same commercial pressure and desire to economize time leads us to keep incomplete records and lays us open to more than a suspicion of inaccuracy. General statements, summaries or conclusions, no matter how positively put forth by us, are open to suspicion also, because we have no true conception of what scientific accuracy means. Many of us entirely fail to study the scientific work which has been done, or is being done, in breeding and heredity, while the best of us can hardly lay claim to more than a superficial knowledge of it, gained through digests, reviews and summaries.

The Scientific Method.

On the other hand, the scientific student of these matters is not primarily concerned about the commercial value of his products, and will preserve for careful study degenerate or sickly individuals which the commercial breeder will promptly discard. Failures are failures, simply, to the one, while to the other they are often subjects for careful study, as possibly containing the key to the cause. The one is concerned solely with the value of the resulting individual, and has neither the time, knowledge nor inclination to search deeply into the cause. To the other, the cause is the main matter of interest, and the possible commercial value of the result is a subordinate one. The commercial breeder has a thorough knowledge of commercial values, and a highly cultivated, almost instinctive selective sense for progressive or valuable traits. The scientific student is quite generally deficient in knowledge of commercial values.

These conditions of wide variance between the two classes of men as to knowledge, methods and aims will explain the state of mild contempt frequently shown by each for the other. The commercial breeder takes a tumble when he attempts to draw scientific conclusions from his work, and the scientist is often left at the post when he ventures to discuss or assign commercial values.

Estimate of Scientist's Work.

It is far from my intent to belittle the work of the scientist. He has worked miracles and is doing so daily. What future work in the close study of the breeding of plants will do, no man can say. It is safe to believe, however, that many problems, the answers to which we cannot even guess at present, will be solved. At the risk of being called a Philistine, however, I am compelled to say that, so far as regards the commercial breeder of florists' plants, the scientist, so far as science has been assimilated, has done little more for him than to enable him in certain cases to make a little shrewder guess. The term scientific breeding, as applied to our subject, is a misnomer. The breeding of florists' flowers remains today almost a pure art.

There are two principal recognized methods of breeding florists' flowers—by selection to fix a type and by cross breeding. The two methods are not so different as they might seem. Success in each depends, barring occasional accident, on the same qualities in the operator. The cross may almost be considered a minor matter. It is the fine, almost instinctive, power for the perception of minute variations, both progressive and retrogressive, on which most largely depends success, and the lack of it in either case means failure.

Power of Observation.

This same power of minute observation enables the cross breeder to become acquainted, as it were, with his subjects, to learn their individual potencies and combining powers, and, year by year, if he is careful about introducing foreign blood, to predict more and more closely the results of his crosses; and yet he will often be unable to give to you or me any good and sufficient reason why he selects or rejects, or why he makes or avoids certain crosses, any more than the painter can give you rule or reason for all the varying form or color in his masterpiece.

Breeding and propagating in floriculture have widely varying objects. One is a process for producing—I had almost said creating—new forms; the other is a process for increasing the number of individuals of one form. An attempt to discuss methods of propagation is unnecessary.

Reasons for Deterioration.

Florists' plants that are propagated by seed do not generally deteriorate for long periods, as the seed is commonly grown by expert specialists, carefully rogued and kept up to standard. In the plants commonly propagated from cuttings, rapid deterioration is often noticed. This is due to one or several of many causes. A poor cutting may be taken from a good plant, or an apparently good cutting from a starved, sickly or overfed plant. The cutting may be weakened by too high a temperature in the propagating bed, or by having to sustain itself too long without roots by reason of too low a temperature in the sand, or by remaining too long after rooting without potting. Attacks of disease or improper growing, of course, hasten the deterioration of a variety, but do not concern us at this time.

Granting that the mechanical part of the work is properly done, the sand good and clean, watering and ventilation properly attended to and soil and after culture all that can be asked, there is still deterioration in many cases. A sickly or diseased plant gives its own warning, and only the most careless grower will take cuttings from it.

Prime Cause of Deterioration.

By far the most insidious danger lies in the strong, vigorous plant producing fine blooms, but overfed. Here is the great danger and here, I believe, lies the prime cause of deterioration, especially in the carnation. A plant once overfed seems a changed individual and this changed condition extends to its progeny by cuttings, to a great degree.

When we have taken cuttings from healthy plants which are in vigorous growing condition, and which we know to have not been overstimulated; when we have given them perfect conditions and perfect care, from cutting to flowering time and back again, year after year, there will often be noted a steady decline in productiveness, with a possible retention of good health and vigor. We have failed to learn our lesson of the breeder; we have selected with only one object in view and have overlooked the difference in productiveness of our individual plants. When we learn to scrutinize every cutting as to its quality, and every plant from which a cutting is made, not only as to its health and vigor, but also as to its flower-producing qualities, and to reject all but the very best, then will we hear less of the deterioration of varieties.

In a word, success in breeding, success in propagating, in fact, success in all floricultural operations, is due to that quality by which some writer has defined genius—an infinite capacity for taking pains.

Methods of Selection.

The following notes, though hardly proper to be included in the reading of this paper, may be of some interest if subsequently printed.

It has been our custom to so time our crossing as to ripen seed for March sowing. These seedlings have been planted in frames and allowed to bloom in the open, those showing desirable qual-

the overdoubled or bursting form. The early bloomers have quite generally been found the freest in bloom through later trials. The bursters have increased in number later, while the singles, though still showing, have not been so numerous. The larger number of desirable varieties have flowered from two to four weeks after the first bloom, and seldom have any been saved after September 15. A record of each cross has, of course, always been kept, and for several seasons a brief record of each seedling blooming, as regards doubleness and color. These records cover 2,170 separate plants, and during a season of confinement to the house were tabulated and summarized in various ways. It should be noted that the records did not cover the entire number of plants from any cross, except in a few cases, as sickly or plainly undesirable forms were at once pulled up, and many had not bloomed when freezing weather came on. With these exceptions, the notes are believed to cover the ground reasonably well, and to be fairly accurate. No distinction was made between those bursting from overdoubleness and those from malformation.

The earlier crosses seemed to produce more singles and fewer bursters. The crosses made December 10 to January 1, where plants were at their best, before feeding commenced, produced very nearly an equal number of singles and bursters, with the commercials showing a slight increase over the sum of the other two. The late crosses showed the bursters in excess of the singles, and the early and late crosses showed the sum of the singles and bursters in excess of the commercials.

The above should not be considered as at all conclusive, as the mid-season crosses were very much in excess of the early and late ones.

Crosses of one female by various males and the reverse, when there were 100 or more individuals, did not vary largely from the proportions of the 2,170 individuals noted before.

Color.

A large number of tabulations were made and much care was exercised in making them, but they all lead back to one conclusion; namely, that the color of the seedling is a matter depending entirely upon the individual potency of the parents. The most potent parents as to color were those which were the result of many generations of previous breeding to color. Some reproduced their color better as males, others as females, and others equally well in either case. Special search was made for some indications of the truth of the theory that the male has the greater influence on color. It is a positive fact that in these 2,170 crosses the theory does not hold. I could get no tabulation, the results of which would not be changed by the withdrawal of certain male crosses and the substitution of certain female crosses, or vice versa. It is true that certain mongrel crosses did show a slight preponderance of the male color in the seedlings, but they were few in number and the withdrawal of a very few crosses would have changed the result to the other side.

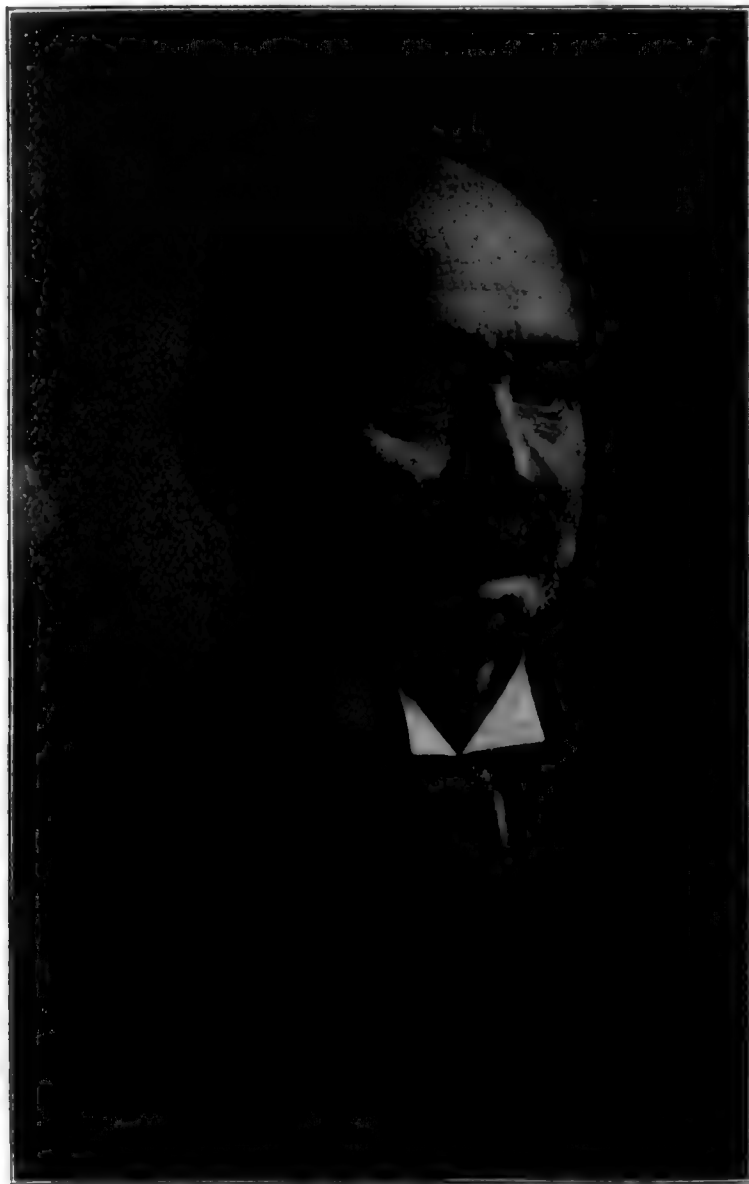

E. A. SCRIBNER.

E. A. Scribner, the new president of the Detroit Florists' Club, has been in the retail flower business at Detroit for about twelve years. Before that time he was superintendent of Waterworks park in Detroit, which all visitors to that city know is one of the most beautiful spots in a beautiful city. The grounds now are the same as laid out by Mr. Scribner many years ago. His experience thus embraces all departments of the florists' business, and he is well qualified by nature to preside over the club's destinies in the coming year.

THE SROCZYNSKI PLACE.

The establishment illustrated herewith, including a pressed brick flat building and store, four modern greenhouses and over an acre of ground, is the property of Peter Sroczyński, of Chicago, who conducts both a wholesale and retail trade at 810 Harding avenue. Besides handling a general stock of plants, each in its season, he makes a specialty of Boston ferns, and he is also noted among the trade for his success in forcing Easter lilies.

Mr. Sroczyński is better known to his Chicago friends as "Big Pete." He came to this country April 5, 1888, with only 35 cents in money, but with the ities being removed to the greenhouse for subsequent trial, the undesirable ones being destroyed, and those not blooming before frost being disregarded, experience having shown them to be generally worthless.

The first bloom has been from July 15 to August 8, varying in different years. The plants blooming earliest have been generally singles and those double enough for commercial purposes, but of medium or small size, with very few of Singleness and Doubleness.

In 733 individuals (one season's crosses), we had: Singles, 161; commercial doubles, 361; overdoubled or bursters, 211. In 1,437 individuals, we had: Singles, 385; commercial, 706; bursters, 346. In 2,170 individuals, we had: Singles, 546; commercial, 1,067; bursters, 557. It will be noted that the sum of the singles and bursters approximates quite closely the total of the commercials.

determination to become a good citizen and a successful florist. He immediately began work for Mr. Gorkey, at $15 per month, but later was associated with Sam Pearce, and to this day he says that Mr. Pearce is the man who pointed out to him the road to success. In the latter part of August it was sixteen years since Mr. Sroczynski started in business for himself and the anniversary was celebrated in appropriate style.

GERBERA JAMESONI.

R. Adnet, of Antibes, writing in the Revue Horticole, describes his experience with Gerbera Jamesoni, and shows that, like other composites, it is likely to afford interesting variations in the form and coloring of the blooms. The red color already varies from the deepest orange to pure scarlet; also a beginning in the doubling of the florets has been noted. The plant requires much nutriment and a porous and not too heavy soil. It is easily injured by much moisture, but applications of manure water when the plants are in full growth are followed by good results. The collar must be placed slightly above the ground level when planted, this part being otherwise liable to be injured by moisture. Increase by means of seed is preferable to division of the root-stock. Fresh seed vegetates from ninety to ninety-five per cent in the course of five to eight days. The young seedlings are particularly impatient of excess of moisture. Under suitable cultivation they flower when about five months old. The plant is employed in the south of France for filling groups and beds and for furnishing blooms for cutting. The florists are hoping to obtain a dwarf, compact-habited race, with a less tender constitution and greater vigor in growth than the type.

which will ruin its effectiveness. The wires should be quite tight and they should not be too heavy, else their own weight will prevent them from being drawn quite tight. Do not economize by using only one strand of twine to each row of plants, as we have seen done. Two strands are required and less will not do the work. You will need three tiers of these wires, or, if you use wire supports, you will need three rings. So, when you lay them in, provide for that many. A bench of plants that are only half supported never looks well and will never give the returns that it would if the plants were supported properly.

Occasionally we see plants unsupported away up to the middle of the winter, which is rank folly. The supports should be put in place before the plants have made very much growth, else while the supports are put in place the plants will be pulled around and half-grown stems will be standing crooked instead of upright, and the next crop will be anything but satisfactory. The old proverb, "A stitch in time saves nine," certainly applies here.

We hear of a few houses which are still unplanted. Plants housed after this date should not be expected to yield a first-class crop for the holidays. That a large per cent of the proper season's yield will be lost goes without saying. The heavy crop will come toward spring instead of midwinter, and instead of good sales at good prices the market will likely be draggy and prices low. Consequently there will be a poor chance for profit.

CONGRESS OF HORTICULTURE.

The Jamestown exposition is the center of horticultural interest this week. In addition to the Congress of Horticulture, held under the auspices of the National Council of Horticulture, upon invitation of the Exposition company and the Norfolk Horticultural and Pomological Society, there are the regular conventions of the American Pomological Society, the American Nut Growers' Association, the Society for Horticultural Science and the Federation of Horticultural Societies. These names have a scientific sound and, indeed, those of the trade are in the minority in most of the societies, but the meetings have called a number of florists, seedsmen and nurserymen to Jamestown this week and on the program of each of the meetings one or more business growers has a Supporting the Plants.

After you have finished cleaning the plants of what dead leaves there may have been, and also the soil of weeds, so there will be little weeding needed until toward spring, it will be time to put your supports in place. The plants will be bearing some blooms from now on, and while they are not as yet very valuable, it pays to keep them off the ground. The plants, too, will be better off for being kept growing upright.

In case of early planting it may pay to keep the early flower shoots topped back, but when plants are housed in August or later I believe it pays to allow the blooms to come, even though you may have little sale for them. There will be less tendency to crop, and while the crop may never be enormously heavy, it will be more steady through the season, and usually more satisfactory.

Growers who have a steady trade to supply will agree that nothing is more disconcerting than to have an oversupply of a certain color for a few weeks and then suddenly, a decided shortage. You will usually find the one followed by the other. This is especially true with varieties which are inclined to stool out and grow what is usually termed grassy.

As to supports, there are many styles and methods, and each has its advocates. For the retail grower who grows a few benches of carnations and may need a part of a bench at any time, the wire supports are the proper method. Of these there are a number of good ones to choose from. The main thing to look for is rigidity. A flimsy support is not worth having, as it will not do what it is intended for. Many large growers are using these supports, too, and with good results. We use our old method of wires and twine, and we are in no hurry to change. The main point when using this method is to have the stays at the ends of the bed solid. If they give an inch there will be a sagging of the wires place. Such of the papers as are of trade interest will appear from time to time in the REVIEW.

THE MILWAUKEE PICNIC.

The accompanying illustration is prepared from photographs made at the annual picnic of the Milwaukee Florists' Club, September 15. There were nearly 200 members and their families present. The Florists' Club donated numerous prizes for the program of races, etc., and the afternoon was thoroughly enjoyed. The pictures show the start in the men's race, the finish in the married ladies' race and the tug-of-war.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

The weather the first part of last week was cool and threatening and a rainy spell set in and lasted up to Friday. On Saturday a bright, hot July day was on hand, the streets once more were crowded and the street florists disposed of their stock nicely. Trade with the retail stores was fair and funeral work held out well.

Roses are still coming in heavily and carnations are enough to meet the demands. Dahlias are almost a glut. Gladioli are shortening up. Cosmos is more plentiful.

Gardeners' Club in Wreck.

Returning last Tuesday evening from the harvest home festival at the establishment of R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons road crashed into the local just as it was backing into a siding and threw the engine down the embankment. Fortunately the coupling broke and the cars did not leave the track. Had the accident occurred a moment sooner, it would probably have resulted in the cutting to pieces of several carloads of the visitors. It was considered marvelous by the railroad men who witnessed it that the passenger cars were not bowled over into the ditch.

Vincent's Dahlia Show.

The fifth annual dahlia show of the R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co., combined with a harvest home festival lasting four days, started September 12, which was gardeners' day. A number of florists and members of the gardeners' clubs from neighboring cities were present. The Baltimore Club left Camden station at 11:50 a. m. and on reaching Cowenton station carriages were on hand to carry the visitors a mile and a half to the show. A genuine country chicken dinner was served and was well enjoyed, after which a general inspection was made of the large packing and shipping department, which was made a bower of loveliness. Branches of oak trees depended from the roof, while the walls were lined with dahlias of all sorts, arranged with such art as to display them to the best advantage. Over 250 varieties were shown.

At present there are twenty large greenhouses and six more will be completed by October 15. Nearly five acres are now under glass. Thousands of greenhouse and vegetable plants are raised in these as he would corn. He has forty acres in bloom, and the effect of those broad fields with their brilliant-tinted flowers is unique and beautiful.

Various Notes.

F. C. Bauer, of Govanstown, Md., is building a new boiler-room of concrete and will have all his boilers under one roof.

F. Seidelich, of Woodlawn, Md., brought the first lot of cosmos to the Lexington market. Mr. Seidelich has installed a new pumping outfit and has a four horse-power gasoline engine.

W. Keir, of Pikesville, has a fine lot of roses coming on.

Lohr & Fritze will install a steam boiler to take the place of hot water.

WATER HYACINTHS.

A thing of beauty is a joy forever;
Its loveliness increases; it will never Pass into nothingness, but still will keep
A quiet bower for us and a sleep
Full of sweet dreams and health, and quiet breathing.

When the late Mr. Keats penned the above lines he had plainly never made acquaintance of the water hyacinth nor attempted to log a saw mill via a hyacinth covered bayou, says the American Lumberman. Men who have done both are aggressively inclined to take issue with the poetic gentleman and with his pernicious doctrine. They admit that the water hyacinth is a thing of beauty, but are ready to take oath that it is quite the opposite of being a joy forever. They trust his prediction that it will never "pass into nothingness" will prove false; and while they are forced to admit that it is putting a number of saw mills to sleep they emphatically deny that a sleeping saw mill is conducive to sweet dreams, either for the owners or the help.

Speaking seriously, the hyacinth in Louisiana has graduated from the inconsiderable proportions of a pest to the full and solemn dignity of a problem. It is costing the business interests thousands of dollars and this summer has been perhaps worse in all respects than ever. Bayou Barataria, across the river from New Orleans, has practically been closed to navigation by this aquatic growth, despite heroic efforts to keep the channel clear. According to the statements in local newspapers, the Louisiana Cypress Lumber Co., operating an extensive plant at Harvey, La., has been forced to shut down temporarily because of its inability to get its log tows through. In Bayou des Allemands similar conditions prevail, and it is known that one large cypress mill has been forced to suspend operations for weeks because of the clogged waterway. Throughout the cypress country the hyacinth is prospering as never before, despite the fight that is being waged against it. The situation is serious and its importance is hardly recognized by those not in the immediate vicinity of the waterways where the damage is being done.

CLEMATIS WITH BARE BASES.

The tendency of practically all the clematis family seems to be to rush upwards as quickly as possible, leaving a base bare and unprotected, but eventually forming a head of tangled shoots. Sometimes an effort is made to keep this head of shoots disentangled and spread out, but rarely do we see any attempt to clothe the bare base with foliage or flowers. And yet, according to a note in an English gardeners' magazine, this is readily done during the growing season, and the return obtained is so altogether disproportionate to the trouble involved that few gardening operations can pay better for the doing. All that is necessary is to divert a few of the strongest shoots in their upward career and twine them downward around the bare stems at the base of the plant. They grow just as well downward as upward, and soon effect a most desirable transformation.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The market is not at all in a good condition at present and business is not at all what it ought to be. The weather has continued warm and a good many asters and other outdoor flowers still arrive. A killing frost is needed to tone up business. Roses are arriving in large numbers, but meet with only a moderate sale; the quality leaves much to be desired. Carnations are steadily increasing in numbers, but do not yet cut much of a figure in the market, owing to the continued abundance of asters, which have proved a fine crop in spite of the late drought of summer. Violets are still small and of poor color. A few Fitzwygram chrysanthemums are seen, but are not superior to best quality asters. Gladioli are nearing the end, also Lilium speciosum. There is a fair supply of Lilium longiflorum, also cosmos, tritomas and other outdoor flowers.

Club Jottings.

R. G. Leavitt, in his talk on hybridization at the last club meeting, referred to the close similarity in pollen masses. When placed in water these pollen grains grew and formed pollen tubes. Some plants were naturally self sterile, never mutually fertile. In the case of perennials, such as daphne, some were self sterile, others fertile in the same species. Speaking of the probable results of using two varieties of pollen on one stigma, he said it was remotely possible that all three might be represented in the offspring. He personally, however, did not believe it. It was impossible for two pollen tubes to get into one ovule. A separate grain of pollen was needed to produce each individual seed.

In the case of orchid pods, which contained many thousands of minute seeds, it was necessary for an equal number of pollen grains to effect the work of cross fertilization. In the case of citrus fruit it had been proved that if three seedlings were produced in one ovule, never more than one of these would be a hybrid. Messrs. F. E. Palmer, D. Finlayson, K. Finlayson, M. A. Patten, F. W. Fletcher and G. Butterworth were among those joining in the subsequent discussion.

The club field day at the dahlia farm of W. W. Rawson & Co. at Marblehead, September 21, was a grand success. Two special coaches were attached to the 12:40 train from the North station. These were well filled, about 125 attending. An excellent lunch was served on arrival at the grounds, after which the large and representative collection of dahlias was inspected. These were in fine condition and blooming freely. The following varieties were particularly good in their classes:

Cactus—Alexander Immer, dark maroon; Ambassador das Marchen, cerise pink; Ignea, Les Alliees, Nil Desperandum, Orion, pink, very good; Perfect, J. H. Jackson, dark maroon; Volker and F. M. Stredwick.

Decorative—Alphonse Isore, red; Katherine Duer, Jeannie Charmet, Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, very fine white; Mrs. Roosevelt, W. W. Rawson and Fireburst.

A few good show varieties were A. D. Livoni, Edward LeFavour, Governor Guild, white; Le Colosse, Dr. Kirtland, Mrs. Gordon Abbot, Rev. J. B. M. Camm and Storm King. There was also a good selection of fancy, single, peony and other types.

During the day a baseball game was played between the married and single men, the former winning after the latter had lost two balls. Before dispersing President Westwood proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Rawson, which was responded to by Maurice Fuld, his manager, Mr. Rawson being absent at the Jamestown exposition. The 6:11 train was taken for Boston, all voting the day a most enjoyable one.

Various Notes.

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society has issued a preliminary list of prizes to be offered at the January, March and May shows in 1908. A number of new classes are provided and considerably more money offered.

W. W. Edgar & Co. have an extra fine house of Bonnaffon chrysanthemums 30x200 at their new establishment. They are building a 50-foot addition to their storage and packing shed.

J. K. M. L. Farquhar and Warren W. Rawson are among the speakers at Jamestown this week, under the auspices of the National Council of Horticulture.

The H. E. Fiske Co. has had some attractive window displays of dahlias and hardy perennials of late. The company has just celebrated its first anniversary and the officers are well pleased with patronage accorded. George C. Thomson, late of Rennie & Thomson, of Providence, is now with them.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club loses a good member in William Allen, gardener at Mount Auburn cemetery for a number of years, who left September 23 to assume the superintendency of Homewood cemetery, Pittsburg. The club at its last meeting voted to send a congratulatory letter to Mr. Allen on his appointment.

J. T. Butterworth and daughter were in Holland when last heard from and will return about the middle of October. He has a grand lot of Cattleya labiata at his establishment in South Framingham just coming in season.

Peter Fisher is marketing some nice blooms of his new scarlet carnation, Beacon, which promises to be the leader in its color this season.

William Nicholson has a fine house of Carnation Afterglow, for which he is eastern agent and which looks like a winner.

John McFarland will force lilacs, not lilies, as stated in last issue of the REVIEW.

REVIEW

is printed Wednesday evening and mailed early Thursday morning. It is earnestly requested that all advertisers and correspondents mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday, or Tuesday at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS MARCH 4, '01.

Officers for 1907: President, William J. Stewart, Boston; vice-president, John Westcott, Philadelphia; secretary, P. J. Hauswirth, 232 Michigan avenue, Chicago; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary, P. J. Hauswirth, 232 Michigan avenue, Chicago; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

BE business-like; write on a printed letter-head, so people will know who and what you are.

AS EARLY as September 7 there were large supplies of chrysanthemums, both cut and in pots, in the market at Covent Garden, London. The sale for them was slow.

WHEN you give a customer directions as to the care of plants, do not speak of dirt; dirt is what some florists have under the greenhouse benches, but it is soil that plants are grown in.

THE Florists' Hail Association has paid out $3,000 for glass broken by hail since August 1, 1907, the recent storm at Des Moines, Ia., having cost the association over one-third of that amount.

If H. F., New York, who writes about ardisias, using plain paper and envelope, will send his name and address the REVIEW will take pleasure in answering his questions to the best of its ability. Names and addresses are not used for publication, but are necessary in all cases; no attention can be paid to any anonymous communication.

ILLINOIS ASSOCIATION.

The Illinois State Florists' Association will hold its third annual convention in Springfield in February, 1908. This will be the greatest convention of the florists and kindred trades that has ever been held in the state of Illinois. Already many inquiries have been made regarding space for trade exhibits.

The committee appointed by the Springfield Florists' Club to look up the matter of exhibits takes early opportunity to ask all who are interested to make known their wants. The committee can give all the space wanted, whether it be for banners to hang up or space on the floor for any kind of exhibit belonging to the trade, and asks hearty coöperation in making this convention a record-breaker.

Springfield, the capital city of Illinois, is located in the center of the state and will be visited by all florists of this, as well as many other states. Springfield is also famous for its horticultural products, no less than eighteen firms being engaged in the growing of cut flowers, plants and vegetables.

This being the center of the state, and its easy access by steam and interurban railroads, assures a great many of the trade being present, thus showing what a factor this convention will be from an advertising point of view.

Hotel accommodations are unexcelled; plenty of room for all at moderate prices. The exhibition and convention will be in the State Armory, with a floor space of 30,000 square feet, with a large gallery surrounding the entire building, fully heated, and the exhibitors need have no fear in sending their choicest stock of cut flowers and plants. Exhibits coming from a distance, and exhibitors not being able to accompany them, will be well taken care of by the local club. The committee especially urges upon all supply men and dealers in greenhouse building and heating material to let them know at once what space they will want, so that it can arrange exhibits to the best advantage. Address all communications to the secretary of the Springfield Florists' Club, George W. Jack, 217 South Fifth street, Springfield, Ill.

GENERAL BUSINESS GOOD.

Bradstreet's, in its current review of the state of trade, says that whether attributable to the improvement in the general financial situation or because of favorable weather allowing of additional crop development, there is a perceptibly better feeling in general commercial lines. Warm weather has favored corn, and seventy-five per cent of the crop is now reported out of danger from frost, while the same influence has allowed of cotton opening rapidly and picking and marketing becoming general. Fall jobbing seems to have reached and passed its zenith perhaps a trifle earlier than usual, and now the traveling men are preparing to go out seeking reorders. Retail trade has hardly been as brisk as desired or expected, because the warm weather, while helping crops, has not stimulated fall buying to any great extent.

THE DEATH ROLL.

C. H. Grigg.

C. H. Grigg, well known in the trade in Philadelphia, died in the Presbyterian hospital in that city Sunday, September 22. He was 70 years of age. Mr. Grigg had a long experience in the retail end of the business, having been connected with the Century and Colonial shops and formerly being a member of Graham & Grigg.

Marcus Ansley.

Marcus Ansley died September 16, at the family homestead, about five miles southwest from Geneva, N. Y., where he was born and which was his residence during his entire life of 81 years. His father, William Ansley, was one of the original settlers there. Marcus Ansley was for some years a nurseryman and afterwards an extensive fruit grower. He was twice married. He leaves his second wife and her two children, besides four children of his first wife, two stepsons and one sister.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The heavy rains at the end of last week put the asters practically out of the running so far as this season is concerned, and the change to weather colder than normal for the season resulted in a decrease in all cuts under glass. The result was that Sunday morning, September 22, the market felt the stimulus of decreased receipts and increased demand, for the two always go hand in hand in this market. When supplies are reduced locally they also are reduced throughout our shipping radius, and the result is an increase in the number of out-of-town orders. Monday saw brisk business in the market, especially in shipping, and it looks as though the season now really is open.

Among roses, American Beauty continues to be in good demand. The receipts are not large, but there is a fair quantity in market and all orders can be filled if received early enough in the day. There is a good call for white roses and these it is not always possible to supply on late orders. Kaiserin continues to be better than Bride, but the latter is steadily improving. Maids are of better color than last week and all roses are of improved substance now that the weather is cooler. The change brought an attack of mildew to those growers who were not prepared to fire.

There are still considerable quantities of asters in the market, but most of them are so poor that the buyers will not touch them. The result is an increased demand for carnations, the steady increase in the receipts of which has been somewhat checked by the cool weather. However, every day sees increased supplies and improved quality. Good Enchantress now is to be had in practically every wholesale house, and, as last year, it is the variety most largely in evidence. Last week there were a great many complaints because carnations did not ship, but this week stock is traveling well. There always is a cry of sleepy stock whenever we have a period of unseasonably warm weather like that of a week ago, and the complaints cease as soon as the stock hardens up under the influence of cool nights. The buyer should know this by this time and should not hold the commission man responsible for natural conditions.

Chrysanthemums of all colors may now be had by ordering in advance. Of course the flowers are not fully developed, but they are with almost all growers better than usual at this early date. The violets from Rhinebeck are selling slowly, for quality is not yet satisfactory. There is a good demand for longiflorum lilies and valley. A few auratums and speciosum lilies still are seen and tuberose roses are to be had. Outdoor flowers are past their best and selling slowly.

There is a good call for greens, especially those used for decorations, for the autumn openings are beginning.

Wittbold's Decorating Headquarters.

The George Wittbold Co. has rented a large double store at 52 and 54 Wabash avenue as headquarters for its decorating department during the rush of fall work. The Wittbold Co. has a number of big jobs on hand for next week, its part of the contract to decorate the Field establishment for the annual opening amounting to around $13,000. With five or six other large jobs on hand, the company was obliged to refuse some business of this character. The store on Wabash avenue, which is little more than across the street from Field's, is this week being stocked with all sorts of stuff from the nurseries at Edgebrook.

Putting in Rocking Grates.

The Martin Grate Co. had a force of men at Bassett & Washburn's, at Hinsdale, this week to set rocking grates under four more boilers. Bassett & Washburn are trying a new method of boiler setting, recommended by the Kroeschells, by which they expect to increase the efficiency of their plant and at the same time decrease the cost of operation. Peter Reinberg also is putting in four more Martin rocking grates this week.

Better Late Than Never.

It always is a pleasure to give a little special prominence to announcements of interesting events in the families of gentlemen whose modesty causes them to keep silent over the good news. This time it was a boy, who arrived August 3 at the home of Joseph Foerster, sales manager for George Reinberg. The daughter has reached the mature age of 17 months.

Ananias Doesn't Work There.

Between the green telegraphers and the telephoning of messages from the telegraph offices instead of delivering them by messenger, some strange things occur. For instance: Saturday Poehlmann Bros. Co. received a telegram by phone calling in a perfectly intelligible manner for quite a lot of stock; but it ended: "Please buy three tutty dulls." That was the best they could make of it after several had tried an ear at the wire. After mature deliberation, influenced possibly by the fact that a few days before the same buyer had wired for a cupid, they decided that "tutty dulls" meant Teddy dolls, Teddy bears bought at Field's were shipped. Monday morning the telegram came in by mail—and then the light broke. It was three putty bulbs that were wanted.

Various Notes.

The telegraph strike still makes trouble, the delivery service being especially poor. All messages are supposed to be telephoned by the telegraph companies, but often are not. E. C. Amling lost a good order from a valued customer Sunday. The message showed that it reached Chicago at 10:05 a. m. Sunday but was not phoned, although the boys were at the store till 2 p. m. getting out orders, and when delivered at noon Monday it was too late. There are many such exasperating happenings.

At this season Chicago always is crowded with visitors. The hotels have been overflowing for the last two weeks. The Auditorium Annex, which now has 1,271 guest rooms, has been turning people away almost nightly. The effect on local trade is not great at this season, but the visitors all leave money here, a part of which will eventually find its way to the florists.

J. A. Budlong is already cutting nice blooms of Aristocrat on stems of fair length for the season. They have 9,000 plants. Winsor is liked for its color, but the stems are like those of Lawson.

John Reardon says that the local gardeners have had an unusually busy September raking leaves. The dry weather of the summer, together with the unusually large number of insects which it developed, caused the trees to lose their foliage earlier than usual this season.

E. H. Hunt reports an unexpectedly large demand for wild smilax for the fall opening decorations, which seem to be coming on a little earlier this year.

Frederick Sperry is at home from Colorado. He has not yet fully recovered from the accident in which the horse he was riding fell upon him. His hand still shows the hoof-shaped scar from the bad cut he received. He left Mrs. Sperry in Colorado.

A. L. Vaughan, of Vaughan & Sperry, is visiting eastern business connections this week.

Ned Washburn, son of C. L. Washburn, returned to Madison this week for his final college year.

Peter Reinberg has his new range of eight houses on the farm completed and planted with carnations.

The trade will learn with sincere regret that Edgar Sanders has failed rapidly in the last few days and that his demise is thought to be little more than a question of days.

Wietor Bros. are cutting well-finished blooms of October Frost, which is the earliest white mum to reach this market. Their Monrovia also is good. N. J. Wietor says the buyers take well to the Joe Hill rose.

C. W. McKellar is busy this week taking in a lot of ribbons and chiffons bought on his recent eastern trip.

George Reinberg's store has been re-decorated this week and now is in complete shape for the fall business.

During the summer the Benthey-Coatsworth Co. has made a change in its heating apparatus at the New Castle plant. The main flow pipe has been taken out of the trench across the range and has been placed overhead. The improvement sought is not in the circulation of steam, but in the evenness of temperature throughout each house.

E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., says that he does not agree with the general view that hardy cut ferns will be plentiful this season. He says he looks for an even greater shortage than last year, especially as he says the greater the demand, usually the poorer the ferns keep.

Weiland & Risch have a grower who has just begun sending them tuberose, two months later than usual, but he now will have supplies until Christmas.

Sam Pieser, who formerly had a retail flower store on North Clark street, is now with the Royal Co., with headquarters in the Auditorium Annex, and takes pleasure in showing the florists who drop in upon him imported cigars that sell as high as $1 apiece.

A number of north end growers were present last week to see the test of the new heating system at Peter Reinberg's Summerdale establishment September 21. A brief note of the results will be found in the Greenhouse Heating Department of this issue.

The A. L. Randall Co. reports an especially good demand for fertilizers, sheep successful one. A visit to C. W. Ward's place, at Cottage Gardens, and to the Dailedouze greenhouses, at Flatbush, impressed Mr. Browne very much. Robert Rahaley naturally was more interested in the commission houses. He was much impressed with the businesslike appearance of the establishment of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., where a force of about thirty-two men is kept busy. He stated that the establishment of the Leo Niessen Co. is the best equipped place he had ever seen. Phil Breitmeyer spoke of the artistic arrangement of the entrance to the convention hall. He said that the majority of people only notice the improved things at an exhibition. J. F. Sullivan was probably the only Detroitter who attended all the meetings of the society. The general hospitality impressed him very much. William Dillger took much interest in the parks in the east. He is still of the opinion that our own Belle Isle park needs but a few hills to put it ahead of them all.

The secretary was instructed to write a letter of thanks to Dreer's establishment, in Riverton, thanking the firm for its hospitality.

A. L. Barnett, of New York, was an interested visitor at the meeting.

Various Notes.

Murray T. Patterson and his mother have returned from a most pleasant trip to Europe. With the exception of the outward voyage, which was marred by seasickness, they enjoyed the trip immensely.

Beard Bros. have just finished the job of putting in a new boiler and shifting the old one. This firm is already cutting some really good carnations.

E. J. Fancourt, of the Pennock-Meehan Co., spent several busy days in Detroit last week.

The date for the annual outing to Mount Clemens is to be announced at the next meeting of the club.

The question of getting the bulk of the stock to the Detroit commission houses earlier was brought up at the last club meeting and, after a somewhat lengthy discussion, the growers promised to do all they could to eliminate this trouble. Already some stock is arriving at an earlier hour. This change will benefit not only the retailer, but the grower and the wholesale houses as well. The business of many of the dealers does not warrant the keeping of a large stock on hand at the present time; therefore they depend almost entirely on this stock.

G. H. Taepke had one of the largest wedding jobs of the season last week.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

During last week and the beginning of this one there was a little more life among the retailers and some of them had their hands full with funeral work, which made white flowers in good demand. The west end florists have booked a number of orders for October weddings. The Veiled Prophet's ball October 1 should use up a good bit of first-class stock in American Beauties and other flowers, more so this year, owing to the fact that President Roosevelt will be in attendance. The decorations on this occasion by C. Young & Sons Co. will be the best in recent years. Nearly all of our society people have returned from summer resorts and the retailers are looking for a more steady demand in all lines.

Stock is looking better every day, and especially so with roses. A few hot days last week made them soft and open and of little use for any kind of work, Richmond and Killarney being noted for this. Bride and Maid came in better, also pink and white Cochet. Extra fine Carnot and Kaiserin are in demand. Beauties in all grades are selling better than ever before at this time of the year.

Carnations are of better color, but still too short in stem. Asters are almost over, but sell well. Dahlias and cosmos are coming in. Lily of the valley sells well.

Wild smilax is now received in large quantities. All other greens are plentiful.

Horticultural Society Meeting.

The executive committee of the St. Louis Horticultural Society held a meeting at the home of C. C. Sanders on the Hunley road September 17. Harry Young occupied the chair. There were present F. H. Meinhardt, Theo. Miller, A. Jablonsky, O. G. Koenig, F. C. Weber, J. Steidle, Alex. Waldbart, A. Nicholson and C. C. Sanders. Plans were laid for the coming flower show, including the final premium list. The hall committee reported that it had secured the new hall, which is about finished, belonging to the United Railways Co., at the corner of Park and Vande-

Various Notes.

Mrs. A. C. Canfield, of Springfield,

Canna King Humbert, which he says is the finest red now in the market.

Charles Kuehn visited his friend, Fred Ammann, at Edwardsville, last week, and reports that his roses and carnations are in better shape than ever.

At the county fair held at Belleville, made a fine display of plants and cut flowers. President Halstead, of the firm, was on hand in person.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The opening of the fall season for outdoor sports has produced its effect on the cut flower market. While flowers were not used either at the Bryn Mawr horse show or the international cricket match, these events brought society home from the seashore and the mountains, and with society home once more entertaining in a small way has commenced.
The department stores have been opening other departments, and the shipping demand, a most important feature of this market, has increased. Conditions have been further affected by some extraordinarily heavy rains, reducing the shipments of outdoor flowers on wet days.
Wild smilax has been in heavy demand, a clear indication that the decorating season is well under way.

growers, the result being a scarcity of white roses on several days, as there are few Brides equal to market requirements. Killarney continues better than Maid during this warm month. Beauties are in good demand, especially the fancy grade, of which many more could be used. The short-stemmed stock is at times overdone. Orchids are becoming much more plentiful, cattleyas being especially fine. Carnations are more abundant. There is some demand for gladioli. Easter lilies are nearly over. There is little call for greens.

But what of asters and dahlias? Dahlias really rule the market today, where handsome flowers are wanted for effect. The quantity of choice varieties has never been excelled, it being possible today to secure many blooms of any one of the finest sorts, and the market, or, more properly speaking, the critical buyer, is taking advantage of this condition to elevate the standard of the public and create a demand for the very best. Asters, chiefly from distant points, are of superb quality, the white Ostrich Plume and a soft pink being exceptionally fine. Locally grown asters are nearly over, much of the stock being short-stemmed, and selling at reduced prices.

Wyndmoor.

Myers & Samtman have decided to name their new cheerful pink rose Wyndmoor, after the small town made famous as a great rose-producing center. It will be remembered that this rose scored eighty-one points before the American Rose Society at Washington last March and that its certificate has been awaiting the choice of a name before being awarded.

A visit to the firm's rose-growing establishment, showing Wyndmoor in its glory, will long be remembered. The plants, some 3,000 in all, had been growing in the tables. During the early stages they were planted close together and replanted July 12 in the house where they are to spend the winter, the stock being then about equal to good 4-inch pot plants. These plants lost no time in growing and bloom so freely that Mr. Myers believes Phil's reputation for veracity would suffer were he to give the exact figures. Suffice it to say, however, that September 19, not quite ten weeks after the plants had been planted, they were in full crop, averaging four or five medium-stemmed buds to a plant and looking the picture of health and vigor. The impression created by seeing Wyndmoor on this day is that this rose can be handled advantageously on any place without regard to its size or soil.

Two Interesting Points.

Two papers that have recently appeared in the columns of the REVIEW are of more than ordinary interest. Both are ably written, by specialists on subjects of which they have made a thorough study, and both contain many points well worth learning.

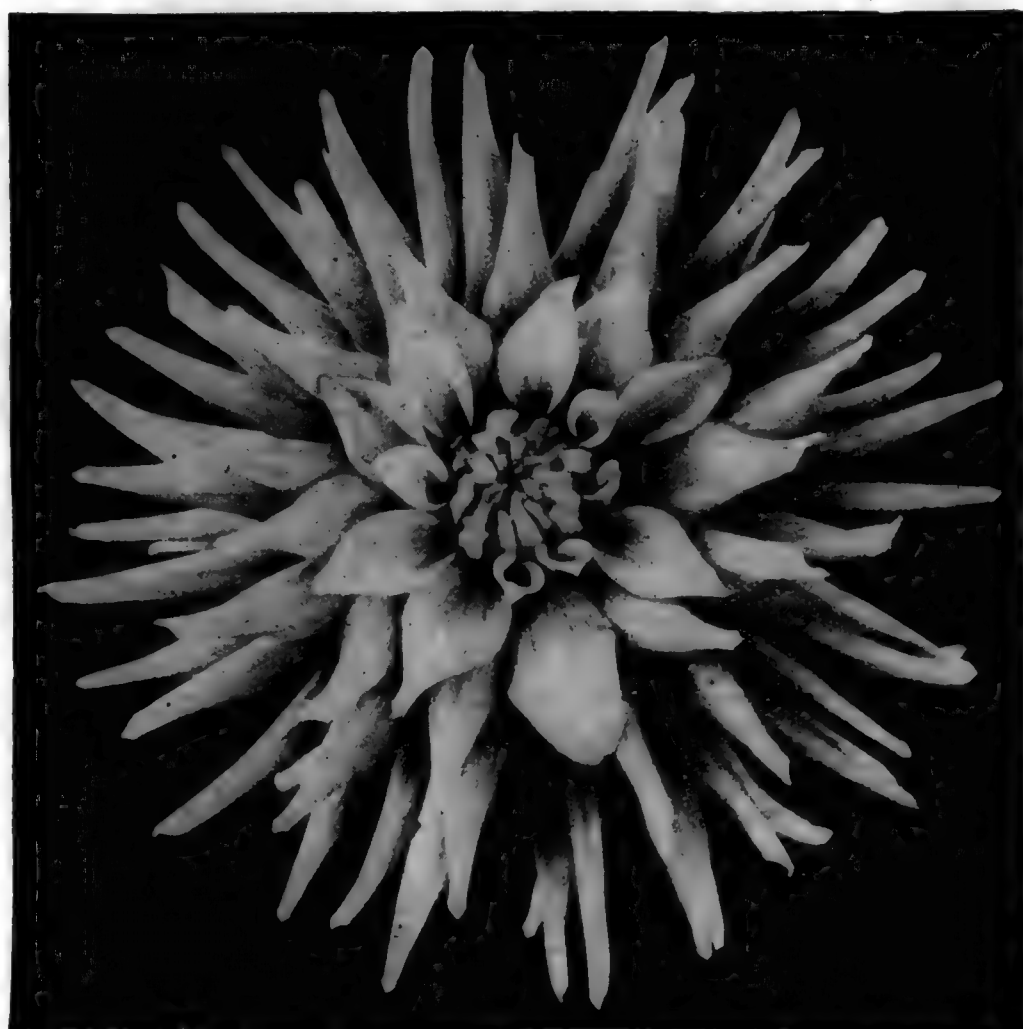

"The Philosophy of Wholesaling," by Charles E. Meehan, read before the Philadelphia Florists' Club, which appeared in the REVIEW of September 5, has a point worthy of debate. In this paper Mr. Meehan gives it as his belief that the retailer would be benefited by buying in larger quantities from the wholesaler instead of ordering small lots of a certain variety during the day. While this may be true, it appears to be a weakness of the argument in favor of the concentration of large quantities of flowers. The very fact that the city retailer has at his door a source of almost unlimited supply encourages him to place risk of depreciation or loss on the wholesaler rather than take it himself.

The second paper, read by F. C. W. Brown, manager of the Rosery, Toronto, before the Canadian Horticultural Association in convention at London, Ont., August 29, appeared in the REVIEW of September 12. After giving some most valuable suggestions as to the management of retail shops, Mr. Brown, who it will be remembered was the manager for J. J. Habermehl's Sons at the Bellevue-Stratford in this city, criticises the growers for asking high prices for the first blooms of chrysanthemums, for instance, when this price cannot be maintained, and, he adds, frightens away flower buyers from the retail stores. This argument has been made by buyers for many years and as the market increases its fallacy becomes more evident. The stock offered is perishable and must be sold soon after it reaches the market. With these facts in mind, it is self-evident that the first stock will not bring more than the buyers are willing to pay, for, let us say, advertising purposes. They have no orders for the flowers, being the first, therefore are not obliged to buy excepting for display. Hence to say that when we know there are only a dozen flowers of a certain variety in the market, with perhaps half a dozen buyers willing to take them, these flowers should bring exactly the same price as when there are a hundred dozen in the market, with more than enough to go around, is clearly a mistake. Would it not be better to tell a customer who is willing to pay a fancy price for the first blooms that the stock is limited, or, as Mr. Brown cleverly states it, would it not be better to sell carnations to a carnation customer rather than endeavor to sell him orchids? An incentive in the way of greater remuneration is absolutely necessary if we wish earlier and longer seasons for any variety of flowers.

A Dahlia Farm.

A wee small voice was heard to say that the most progressive paper really ought to say something about dahlias. It was not the voice of conscience, but of a friend over the telephone, who thought Phil ought to visit Atco. It was Phil's half holiday, and especially prized on account of the cricket match at Manheim, but the wee small voice was successful, because it really is necessary to give up international cricket matches sometimes if you want to keep in the lead. So to Atco, New Jersey, Phil repaired, reaching there in due time, despite the delaying efforts of numerous thundering expresses, laden with visitors to the sea, for whose benefit the local was repeatedly sidetracked. These slight drawbacks were entirely forgotten in the genial welcome of David Herbert, who was waiting at the Atco station with horse and buggy. Mr. Herbert was apologetic at the absence of his son, William C. Herbert, who, he modestly insisted, was the man to see. Phil could not help feeling that he was in very good company indeed, and could not help enjoying his visit hugely, despite the absence of Mr. Herbert, Jr. The gleanings of a pleasant two hours are as follows:

David Herbert & Son have seventy-five acres of land devoted to dahlias exclusively. They commenced business January 2, 1906, and in the space of a year and a half, or a little more, have thoroughly overhauled their plant and fields, putting them in the best of running condition. The greenhouses were entirely rebuilt on brick foundations; the boiler, packing and storage sheds were completed and enlarged; the water system was entirely remodeled, a new and larger tank being elevated; a new gasoline engine was installed; the steam heating system was relaid, the saving in coal being fifty per cent over that of the previous year, a fact that speaks volumes for tight roofs and sound greenhouses and for properly laid steam pipes.

While speaking of steam heating, it may be of interest to say that a bitter cold night came on before the work was finished. Mr. Herbert, who was away, rushed back to Atco, fearing the dahlia roots had been frozen. When he arrived he found the foreman, Ed Young, fast asleep in a chair in the office, and—the temperature in the houses just at the right point. He had a right to be asleep, as Mr. Herbert proudly exclaimed, for he had been up all night keeping the temperature up with oil stoves. Mr. Young was working away for dear life, packing dahlias to go up on the next train, and was evidently the right man in the right place on all occasions. Later on he was seen at the railroad station loading a haywagon full of empty crates to be taken back to the farm.

crops. They are now coming into full bloom, the shipments last week running up to 16,000 blooms a day, while this week on clear days they are touching 20,000 blooms daily. There are 136 new varieties of various types on trial. Of the older varieties, it is especially noteworthy that the popular sorts, such as Kriemhilde, pink and white; Lyndhurst, scarlet; Mrs. Clifford W. Bruton, yellow; Catherine Duer, scarlet; Nymphaea and Sylvia, like sisters, pink and white, and Winsome, white, are grown in quantity to meet increasing demands. The Century type, the large singles, are here in force, presenting a striking picture waving in the fields. The pompons, cactus, decorative, show, all the leading types, have hosts of followers too numerous to mention. A large soft pink, named John Thorpe, was especially pleasing.

The impression created by the place was of a business enterprise thoroughly and systematically run in every detail. A word of praise should be given to the cleanliness everywhere evidenced, in field, in packing-shed, in greenhouses.

The varieties appeared absolutely true to name, a vacancy here and there telling the fate of a rogue who had trespassed. The Messrs. Herbert are making a specialty of roots, believing them preferable to extensive propagation from cuttings.

Various Notes.

William P. Craig says the sales of Nephrolepis Amerpohlii have exceeded his most sanguine expectations.

John McIntyre, who had the credit of being first in the market with mums, as stated in the REVIEW last week, says that his variety was Monrovia, a good yellow. They were sold September 20.

C. H. Grigg, formerly of Graham & Grigg, the Century Flower Shop, and the Colonial Flower Shop, died September 22 at the Presbyterian hospital, aged 70 years. The funeral services were held at his home in West Philadelphia.

W. E. McKissick will speak before the Florists' Club next Tuesday evening.

M. Rice & Co. are meeting with great success with their new water-proof maline netting. It is especially valuable where designs have to be shipped and sprinkled before packing up.

John Savage is sending fine bouvardia to the Pennock-Meehan Co.

William Munro, of Garrettford, is sending fine Beauties to W. E. McKissick.

William Bassett and Wood & Healy, of Hamonton, N. J., are shipping some splendid dahlias to the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.

The William Graham Co. had two large decorations this week for department stores.

Edward Reid has been making improvements in his up-to-date commission house. The ice-box on the first floor has been thoroughly overhauled and placed in condition for the stock used in the local trade. Supplies of manila, brown tissue and wax paper have been added for the convenience of customers. In the basement, where the important shipping department is located, is a splendid cooling room, the dome of which appears through the first floor. Mr. Reid is fortunate in having gathered together a band of particularly expert growers who are careful to carry out his instructions to the letter, so that his flowers may be truly said to be grown especially for the benefit of his distant customers. Mr. Reid wishes to go on record as being an anti-dahlia man. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Commencing Saturday and lasting until Monday night, it rained almost continuously. Business and the weather are in harmony. Even Beauties are abundant and few reach the top quotations. Nearly everything else in the rose department is short-stemmed and open and it is difficult to dispose of anything at fair prices. Even the outlet through the street merchants is dammed and the atmosphere in the wholesale marts is gloomy and depressed. Everyone is praying for a good frost and the destruction of the outdoor competition.

There seems to be no end of the aster supply. Amateurs have had a lesson that may prove beneficial another year. When great heaps of the stock are sold for $1 a hundred bunches, and lots of it thrown out altogether, it would seem unnecessary to suggest to growers the need of having the best or nothing in the aster line to send to the New York market. The same applies to gladioli. For the common varieties there is no sale except at cut rates, which means less than cost, but for the best kinds there is a constant demand and values hold splendidly.

Few carnations are satisfactory. Stems are short and flowers are small. Violets are here almost a month ahead of any possible demand. Saturday and Sunday they dropped to 50 cents and $1 a thousand. Forty boxes a day already are coming in. When one of the growers up state begins to ship, the rest follow on as fast as they can and so the menace of premature enterprise is with us.

Orchids are received in variety and quantity and prices are reasonable.

Dahlias are improving daily in quality. Valley and lilies hold their advanced prices.

Various Notes.

Anton Schultheis is back from Europe and Will Siebrecht will be home this week. These are the valley kings of the east.

The dahlia show at the American Institute began Tuesday and lasts three days. There is also a fine general exhibit of other flowers, plants and fruits.

All this week at Mineola the big annual fair will be in progress and the florists of Long Island will make extensive displays.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be held October 14. There will be an illustrated lecture by Mr. Nash, of the New York Botanical Gardens, and an exhibition of flowers and plants that will make the new rooms homelike and attractive. Before the meeting it is hoped to have a bowling club established, President Totty being anxious to leave this as one of the heritages of his administration, even if the home inspiration is postponed.

Joseph Millang, of the Cut Flower Co., is getting some fine Winsor carnations from the big Scarborough houses, the advance guard of an enormous anticipated supply.

GEO. B. HART.

Dear Sir:—At Easter time, with a little chiffon decoration with the handle, we were able to increase the value of plants from 50 to 100 per cent.

H. E. WILSON.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 2, 1907.

GEO. B. HART.

Dear Sir:—Hart's Handy Handle makes a basket out of a flower pot without having to transfer the plant to a basket. We used a lot of them last Easter on azaleas and other blooming plants, and decorated the pots and handles, and the effect was the same as a basket, and sold well, as the expense was much less than using baskets and the effect was just as good. They are good any time of year and, unlike baskets, they don't get shop-worn. Yours truly, SALTER BROTHERS, Florists.

the last ten days at his old home in Rhinebeck. He says the stock of violet plants is enormous, but October 15 is early enough for shipments and it is suicidal to crowd the New York trade before that date.

D. Willis James, of Madison, N. J., died at his summer home in New Hampshire last week. Under William Duckham's superintendency Mr. James' estate at Madison was developed into one of the most beautiful country places in America.

Robert G. Wilson is a busy man, completing his greenhouse establishment on Green avenue, Brooklyn, which he has rebuilt, installing concrete benches, the invention of his brother, and so making the plant practically everlasting. A great many of the Long Island growers have visited Mr. Wilson's place and at once decided to adopt these benches. Mr. Wilson has had many wedding decorations this month, and one for $500 this week at the Brich mansion and last week one at Mount Vernon.

square feet of floor space, occupying the three upper stories of the new Bryant Park building, Forty-second street and Sixth avenue. These rooms are to be equipped with every modern convenience and to be, when completed, the most extensive and beautiful baths in the world. There will be all the adjuncts of a first-class hotel in connection. The baths will open November 1.

Adolph LeMoult and wife are enjoying their holiday in the Adirondacks. The old store has been a landmark for forty-five years on the Bowery and has become the property of the city, but LeMoult is still young and ambitious and has been fortunate in securing new quarters only two doors distant from the old stand.

John Young is now headquarters for John Scott's gardenias, which are selling well.

The Plant Growers' Association has a large membership and has had several meetings, perfecting plans for uniform prices that ought to place this department of the florists' business on a substantial basis.

JUST READ IT!

The Florists' Review says in its issue of Sept. 12, 1907:

"The book is noteworthy as showing the rapid development this house has made in the last few years. The pages are 10x13 and the book contains ninety-two (92) of them, printed on the heavy calendered paper, so that the half-tone illustrations show up in fine shape. The C. C. Pollworth Co., including the greenhouses, contains about everything the florists of the northwest require for their season's business. There are also a number of pages devoted to the plant department, others to bulbs, and the body of the book to the supply business, which is rapidly becoming the leading feature with this firm. They handle not only retailers' requisites, but a large line of supplies for the grower."

in his experience. A good many florists laid in stock of palms. Some large kentias brought $25 apiece. Palms are scarce, the growers say. Siebrecht & Son have not a kentia to offer at wholesale. Straws show which way the wind blows.

Hicks & Co. found more room a necessity. Now they have the entire floor at 52 West Twenty-third street and are busy with fast growing shipments. The ice-box has moved into the yard.

Harry Hoffmeir, of Eighty-third street and Broadway, has been busy with the fall openings of the big stores, especially in their millinery departments.

Paul Meconi, the latest wholesale venturer, has also ventured on the sea of matrimony, having just married Miss May Johnson, of Brooklyn.

Ford Bros. found their big ice-box inadequate for the increased shipments of the new season, and have just installed another, almost as large, in their basement.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

WASHINGTON.

Business is on the increase. There seem to be more early weddings this season than usual. The Saturday afternoon wedding, since the Longworth-Roosevelt affair, seems to be quite popular. It is not so popular with the decorator, as it is necessary to take the decorations out the same day.

The club attended the dahlia show at White Marsh September 18. Mr. Gude expressed himself, with the others who attended, as being well pleased. The blooms in the fields were not so far advanced as last year, but the show in the potting-shed was as fine as, if not better than, last year. The arrangement was excellent. The roof was a canopy of foliage and a number of new single varieties were shown and made quite a hit with the dahlia experts. On the way home the florists had quite a scare. As their train was backing into a siding, a New York train ran into the front end of their train, reducing the engine and tender to junk. Several were injured, but luckily no florists among them. Ten seconds would have made a different story.

F. H. Kramer went to the dahlia show and from there to Boston.

Miss Nellie Breuninger, bookkeeper at Gude's, has gone to the seashore for a rest.

The North Shore Horticultural Society held its regular meeting September 20, President McGregor in the chair. Maurice Fuld, secretary of the New England Dahlia Society, gave an interesting and instructive lecture on dahlias. Mr. Fuld gave the history of the dahlia and also of various dahlia societies, including the N. E. D. S., its objects and difficulties. He spoke at length on the culture of the dahlia, closing his remarks with an invitation to the society to visit the W. W. Rawson dahlia farm, of which he is superintendent. A vote of thanks was extended to Mr. Fuld for his lecture and the meeting was voted as one of the best ever held by the society.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & Co., Philadelphia, report the crop failure of Sweet Pea Countess of Lathom.

G. B. McVAY is vice-president of the newly-organized Birmingham Florists' and Horticultural Society.

IN Michigan the bean crop is thought to be up to all requirements, except on a limited number of varieties.

LIGHT frosts in Nebraska have not yet hurt the corn, but late varieties of sweet corn for seed purposes are not yet safe.

THE Holland bulbs seem to be giving better satisfaction than usual this year. Importers are busy getting out orders in a pleasant frame of mind.

LATEST advices from California are indicative of better deliveries of onion seed than were at one time thought to be within the bounds of possibility.

THE little lots of onions grown for seed in nearly every locality where seedsmen operate at all are reported to be turning out quite well, as a usual thing, and will be quite a help on next season's supply.

THE market people are discussing what can be done "to restore the uniform high quality to the Rocky Ford melons" for next season. The opinion is that the Rocky Ford growers and shippers are getting careless.

THE Azores islands crop of Liliun longiflorum bulbs has reached this country. It is fine-looking stock and the quantity is considerably increased over last year; enough so that several houses have a few to offer, after filling orders.

ALFRED EMERICH, representing Vilmorin, Andrieux & Co., Paris, France, will arrive in New York Saturday, September 28, to pay his annual visit to the seed trade. Mr. Emerich's headquarters are with H. Frank Darrow, the firm's American agent.

BAILEY & SONS, Salt Lake City, Utah, who deal in grain, seeds and bags, have incorporated with $100,000 authorized capital stock. The officers are: President, J. H. Bailey; vice-president, P. E. Banker; secretary and treasurer, S. N. Bailey; manager, Burt Bailey.

W. ATLEE BURPEE, Philadelphia, reports a flood of orders from Europe for their two new Spencer sweet peas, both by mail and cable. These originated with L. C. Routzahn, at Arroyo Grande, Cal., and Howard M. Earl, of the Burpee firm, is now on the ground where the seed stock for dissemination has been grown this summer.

W. W. JOHNSON & SON, Ltd., Boston, England, say that while this is a year of general seed shortages, it will not affect the regular annual increase of their business, as larger acreages were provided for in consequence of the steady growth of their trade. Their trade in America has expanded more rapidly than any other part of the business, but E. J. Deal may not visit the United States this year.

TWO MANY SWEET PEAS.

It would be a decided advantage to the buying public if our American seed merchants followed some such weeding out plan in their 1908 catalogues as that adopted by the English Sweet Pea Society, reported September 12. To list 100 to 150 varieties, as some now do, is absurd. Twenty-five to thirty would as well cover the field and prove less bewildering to purchasers. There may be one or two worth retaining in the list the English society is dropping, but at least fifty out of the fifty-seven would be better dropped by American seedsmen, both to their own advantage and that of their customers. In some catalogues for 1907 we were pleased to note a smaller and more select list of sorts. We hope to find it in many more another season.

to mention that the home-grown sorts have much suffered from the unsettled and unfavorable weather in May and June, and therefore we will this season see greatly varying qualities; bright colors will be scarce and in demand."

Referring to festucas he says: "Festuca arundinacea, elatior, the genuine Rhenish seed which is only grown in a small district in this neighborhood, brought this season one-third less than last fall, and in consequence higher prices had to be paid to the growers. I am already occupied with the cleaning of my lots. The new seed is of an excellent quality, and the germination is very satisfactory, too. The prices for well cleaned seed are ruling favorably considering the shortness of the crop.

"Festuca duriuscula, ovina, at the beginning the outlook entitled to the best expectations, and the owners had the best hopes for a rich harvest. But owing to the continued rainy weather the color of this species has suffered, and the seed is darker than last year's. Bright lots are rare, and besides, there is a great loss in cleaning, as the new crop contains much light seed and chaff, so that fancy and superfine qualities will command higher prices than last season.

"Festuca ovina angustifolia yielded an extraordinarily short crop, and consequently was only obtainable at high prices. The lots are now coming in and the quality turns out satisfactory. It is not yet possible to say anything definite regarding the germinative power and the results of the cleaning of the new crop; undoubtedly high prices have to be charged for well cleaned qualities.

"Festuca heterophylla and Festuca rubra, which sorts grow in Germany only in limited quantities, yielded about the same as in 1906. Red fescue is this year quoted at such high figures that it does not pay for our market."

70 per cent. These estimates may or may not be proved later, but one thing is believed generally by the trade, and that is that there will be a passably fair crop of onion seed.

"Early varieties of garden peas have been harvested, and from many growers come reports of quite extreme shortages, especially in Early Alaska, Daniel O'Rourke and those sorts especially largely used by canners; and right here I will take space to say that many of our largest seed houses, who have for years been large suppliers of seeds to canners, are not expressing themselves as pleased wholly with the orders of these canning factories, and for this reason—it is a most uneven business. A firm may sell several hundred bushels of a certain variety of peas, let us say, for years to canner customers, when without warning the demand for this sort ceases, and a surplus to be disposed of at a loss develops. Again, in a short year like the one we feel is coming, those same customers who have, without reason, turned their orders elsewhere in years of plenty in order to, perhaps, save a few cents a bushel, expect their regular seedsman to take care of them, even if no seeds are left for the seedsman's regular trade."

SEEDSMEN'S RESPONSIBILITY.

A Nebraskan writes to the Rural New Yorker complaining that he bought seed of Vick's Scarlet Globe radish of a local dealer and that the crop turned out to be worthless because the radishes were all shapes and colors, not over five per cent being true. Dr. W. Van Fleet makes comment in part as follows:

"There ought to be substantial redress for such betrayal of a purchaser's confidence, whether or not the seeds were guaranteed as true to name by the dealer; but as a matter of cold fact the dealer in seeds has been practically relieved of all responsibility by recent legal decisions, when selling under the usual non-warranty clause. All he is required to do, as the law is now interpreted, is to deliver a package bearing the name of the variety called for. The purchaser has all risks as to crop results. All honorable dealers, however, stand ready to rectify obvious errors in filling orders, but do not hold themselves liable for losses beyond the original purchase price.

"Seed growers appear to be held to stricter account, as the courts claim they are in position to know the exact nature of their offerings, while the dealer cannot

SEEDS OF STOCKS.

Wherein lies the vital force that makes stocks single or double? I read that only five per cent of single plants should be allowed to remain; that only the pods on the center stem should be gathered, and of these only the seed from the lower half of each pod should be taken. With all this who will guarantee his seed to produce sixty per cent doubles? I have tumbled into some facts which lead me to suppose that climatic influence has much to do with this matter. Certain amateur growers here in British Columbia annually save their own seed. They certainly possess fine strains. They claim that without any care or selection their strains improve every year, both in quality and number of doubles. Last year I undertook to experiment. A bed of Princess Alice was allowed to stand for seed. It contained sixty per cent doubles. A bed of Queen Alexandra contained fifty per cent doubles. All the singles were allowed to remain. This year the result is seventy-five per cent and sixty-six per cent doubles, respectively. All the singles are again allowed to stand. No selection was made. All pods, except malformed ones, were harvested. A bed of Princess Alice stock from imported seed was also planted. This bed is inferior, both in quality and quantity of doubles. It is worthy of note that nearly all forms of vegetation are strong on this north Pacific coast, and many seeds saved here are of superior quality. We have a long growing season, an equable climate, and a perfect summer for ripening.

BURBANK'S THORNLESS CACTUS.

At the irrigation congress held in Sacramento recently, Luther Burbank gave a talk on cacti. Among other things, he said:

"One-third of the earth's surface is desert. Nearly the whole of Australia, except a narrow rim along the coast, has been found to be almost useless for any purpose except sheep raising. The cactus which was introduced there, and also into South America, was one of the poorest varieties and was brought there probably for ornament, on account of its large and luxuriant thorns, and it has since taken possession of those countries. It is destructive to sheep, often getting into their eyes, and when once introduced on the land it costs more than the value of the land to eradicate it.

"Fifteen years ago I was examining and studying forest plants for dry regions, to see what improvement could be made upon them, and it struck me that the cactus, if the thorns could be taken off, would be one of the best for desert culture. I found by raising them from seed that ninety-nine out of a hundred would be thorny, but once in a while one would be found that had few or no thorns. I carefully saved the seeds from these and, after growing thousands and thousands of seedlings, I finally produced one that was absolutely thornless.

"Now, as I wished to get a cactus that would produce a great amount of nourishment, of course my first object was to get it thornless, and next to get a variety that would produce the greatest quantity of forage per acre. That has been well accomplished. I have a cactus that, set out in rows 3x6 feet, produces 200 tons of food per acre. Twenty tons per acre from beets, carrots, turnips or cabbages is considered a good crop. Some of the older cacti will produce as much as 100 tons.

"The cactus is not as nutritious as the beet, but there is much more water in it. By analysis some cacti produce 2½ per cent of starch, while others produce but 5-100 of 1 per cent, showing the difference in constituents. My object is to combine this great productiveness with great nutrition, and when that is done my opinion is that the cactus will be the most important plant that there is on earth today for arid regions. I have taken the wild Colorado cacti, planted them thickly in a small bed and given them no water; then I have planted four or five of my improved cacti in the same bed and the improved cacti starved the others almost to death. With the same treatment they will grow three or four feet in height, be in perfect vigor and often weigh five to seven pounds each, while the Colorado wild cacti are drying up for lack of moisture. The ability of the improved cacti to root deeper, from their greater individual growth, gives them the opportunity to strike deeper and take the moisture up, while the common wild cacti cannot reach it and hence starve to death.

"Every animal that eats vegetation of any kind is very fond of the cactus and for that reason it has thorns. Otherwise it would have been either out of existence or it would have taken some other means to protect itself. Cows relish cactus and, when used to it, prefer it to any other kind of fodder. It produces good milk and is used in the Hawaiian islands and northern Africa for that purpose extensively. If people only knew what cactus is and knew the benefits to be derived by planting the improved sorts, it would soon prove to be the greatest thing ever known for reclaiming arid soil naturally." G.

We have the greatest pleasure in being able to introduce this exquisite new color in Eschscholtzias. It is so delicate and striking that we are certain it will excite universal admiration, especially with the ladies, and become one of the greatest favorites of this charming race of our new improved compact Californian Poppies. It is a most impossible to adequately describe its soft and delicate shades of color, but we are having a plate prepared which we think will do justice to its beauty.

The color is a tender bluish, or pale coral pink, slightly deeper toward the edges, with a groundwork of delicate cream, and like the Intus Rosa, our introduction of two years ago, the petals are quite the same color inside as outside, so that the color effect is the same when the flower is open as when closed—a quite unusual point in all other Eschscholtzias.

It has the same upright, compact habit as Eschscholtzia Intus Rosa, forming a small, compact bush, very free blooming, with the flowers standing well above the bright green foliage, which gives it a singularly attractive appearance for bedding or massing.

$15.00 per 100 packets; $2.00 per dozen packets. (25c retail.)

Godetia Crimson Glow

This splendid new Godetia will be eagerly sought after when once known. It forms a compact little bush about 9 inches in height, completely smothered with flowers of the most dazzling, intense crimson. A bed of this variety produces a vivid effect, the intensity of which it is impossible to describe. We are having a plate prepared, which will perhaps convey some idea of its splendid color, but to be fully appreciated, it must be seen growing. In habit it resembles our Godetia "unset," which is without doubt the most compact in habit and most free blooming Godetia yet introduced.

$15.00 per 100 packets; $2.00 per dozen packets. (25c retail.)

LETTUCE IN SOLID BEDS.

I am a new reader of the REVIEW and shall be glad to have you give us some information on growing lettuce in solid beds.
H. W. W.

You are lucky in having solid beds, as lettuce is far more easily handled in them than in raised benches. To begin with the sowing of the seed, these are best sown in flats, in a rather light, free soil. In such a soil the seedlings are not so apt to damp off as they would be in a soil that is heavy and retentive. Sow the seed rather thinly, cover lightly and place in a house where the night temperature does not exceed 45 degrees. Give sufficient water to settle the soil after sowing and keep moderately moist but not too wet. A shading of the flats is beneficial until germination has taken place, as it prevents drying out and obviates the necessity of watering so frequently.

When large enough to handle, the little plants should be pricked out into flats, allowing them a space of about two inches each way. This gives them sufficient space so that they will be large enough to plant into the bench before they begin to crowd one another in the flats.

If the soil in the beds has been used for former crops and the fertilizing properties pretty well spent, a good dressing of manure should be forked into it previous to planting. I prefer to use manure from the cow-barns to that from the horse stable and like to have it in a pretty well decomposed condition, but I would use either in preference to artificial manures, as lettuce does not seem to take kindly to them.

In planting be careful not to set the plants too deep in the soil. This precaution saves much trouble from stem-rot, much of which can undoubtedly be traced to carelessness in this matter. The distance apart at which it is best to set the plants will depend to a certain extent on the variety grown, but as a general rule eight inches each way will be found the most profitable distance.

One of the most important points in the cultivation of lettuce under glass is the watering. This part should never be left to a careless operator but should be intrusted to a man who knows his business, or one who can be depended on to do as he is told. Bright days only should retain the moisture much longer than a raised bench would and water should not be given every time that they appear a little dry on the surface. It is always a safe plan to find out the condition of the soil a few inches below the surface and make sure that water is necessary before it is applied.

Next in importance is airing, and care should be taken that the ventilators are opened, be it ever so little, on every possible occasion, as much of the success of the crop depends on the sweetness of the atmosphere and guarding against condensation. If the house is allowed to sweat and the condensation allowed to settle on the foliage, it creates a congenial condition for the development of fungous diseases, but with proper attention to watering and airing the trouble from such diseases can readily be reduced to a minimum. The surface of the soil should be frequently stirred to keep it sweet and no decayed or yellow leaves should be allowed to remain on the plants.

If a leaf lettuce is desired, the best to grow is Grand Rapids. This is the easiest of all the varieties to handle. For a head lettuce the Boston Market type is the best. A selected strain of this, known as the Hothouse strain, is an improvement on the old form. WM. SCOTT.

LETTUCE AND TOMATOES.

I have two small houses, 10x50 feet, in pot ferns, which I expect to be rid of by January 15, and I thought of filling the benches with soil and planting lettuce. When should Grand Rapids lettuce be sown, to have them ready to plant early in January? Later I want to plant tomatoes. When should these be sown, to get fruit ripe a little before the outside tomatoes come in? Is Comet the best forcing tomato?
J. M.

Lettuce seed of the Grand Rapids variety should be sown three or four weeks before the plants are wanted for the houses in which they are to mature. If your houses will not be ready before January 15, plant the seed between December 10 and December 15. The seeds should be sown in shallow flats, in a light, sandy soil, which should be sifted and fresh from a new pile, not previously used inside. Press the soil firmly be selected for the application of water and it should be so applied that as little as possible will get on the foliage, or into the hearts of the plants. Always apply water in the morning, just as soon as the sun heat has begun to tell on the temperature of the house, as this allows the longest possible time for the moisture to become dried up before closing down time arrives. RAWSON'S HOTHOUSE CUCUMBER into the corners of the box and around the edges; then smooth it perfectly and press it down lightly with a square board not much lower than the edge of the box. The seed should be covered thinly and watered very carefully. Keep the soil just moist; if overwatered, the entire lot may damp off and be lost.

As a forcing Cucumber is one of the largest and most profitable crops of the Market Gardener, it is essential that the very best possible strain should be sown. With this idea in view we have made selections for the past few years from our Rawson's White Spine, which have resulted in a strain about two inches longer and a darker green in color, with a few light spines showing at blossom end. This new strain we confidently believe to be superior to any other on the market. The results we have had at our own greenhouses with the stock conclusively prove the above to be true. 1/4 oz., 35c; 1 oz., 60c; 4 oz., $1.50; 1 lb., $5.00.

The tiny plants should be transplanted, when only a few days old, into other boxes, putting the plants about an inch or an inch and a half apart. There they will make nice, bushy plants by the time they are needed. Give the plants plenty of fresh air and do not let them run too warm. A temperature of 45 degrees at night and 55 to 60 degrees in the daytime will make a nice, healthy growth, better able to stand the diseases to which lettuce is subject. Watering should be light and early in the day. Great care should be taken to prepare a light, sandy soil, enriched with well rotted manure. If the benches have been used for pot plants, tear all covering from the cracks in the bottom, to give the soil good drainage. If necessary, tear up the bottom and replace it, leaving a crack between the boards. Then put on a good coat of whitewash. Sterilized soil is excellent for lettuce.

Tomatoes require about five months from the planting of the seed until the plants commence to bear. They can, however, be kept in flats and pots about three months of this time, before benching. Comet is considered the best forcing variety by many of the leading growers. For further information on tomatoes, see the REVIEW of August 22, page 66. H. G.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Extremely hot weather last week did not have a good effect on trade. Stock was plentiful, but small buyers were not in evidence. However, the shop men were all in good humor and report more advance orders for the late fall and early winter than they had last year for the same time, and the prediction is for a good year. Among the wholesalers there was some complaint of shipped stock coming in showing the effects of the heat. Roses from young stock are coming in heavier every day, but, having short stems, do not amount to much. There were quantities of light pink asters with short stems, which were not in demand, but good white, which were wanted, were scarce. Lilies also have dropped out of sight. Gladioli are still coming in large quantities and dahlias are getting better every day.

Various Notes.

Disgruntled growers are now deciding to whom they will consign, and the houses depending on them are beginning to know where they are and the minds of the commission men are being relieved.

The ordinance officers have kept the street men in hot water the last few days, as they are not allowed to put anything on the sidewalk, thus being prevented from making the usual show.

At a stockholders' meeting of the Amuse U Co., of which L. I. Neff is president, their books made a showing which would have tempted almost any florist to go into the amusement business.

Mr. Holmes has joined Mrs. E. A. Williams' force of decorators; the advance orders which they have now booked made help a necessity.

Jarve Smith has been down looking over his farm and arranging things for winter. He has been successful with his summer flowers and has managed to keep a succession of blooming stock, all of which has been good.

Ernest Zieger is hustling now to get his large house in shape in order to get in his decorative plants in time to take care of his early orders. His storeroom is almost completed.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Turner, of Wilkinsburg, have a son.

Burglars tried to enter the home of Will Flemm, of Breitenstein & Flemm, Sunday night, but were not successful. About a year ago they touched him for several hundred dollars and probably thought he might have saved up another roll by now.

John Wyland has constructed a large fish-pond on his place, on which he spends his leisure time in a canoe of the latest pattern. Mr. Wyland reports his stock as being in better shape than ever this season. Hoo-Hoo.

 McCASLIN BROS.

Zanesville, O.

COULDN'T ANSWER HIS MAIL.

A subscriber in the west sends the REVIEW a circular issued by William Kuyk, of Hillegom, Holland, giving details as to the new carnations originated by Alfred Giraud and for which varieties
 Mr. Kuyk is looking for a purchaser.
 The circular begins:

"With reference to the advertisement in the WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW of June 20, 1907, page 31, I received so many letters that I decided to make a circular giving the desired particulars."

When an advertiser, who offers for sale the entire stock of a new plant, gets so many applications for details that he cannot answer them all by letter, he ought to be pretty well satisfied with the results from an advertisement that cost $10, and evidently Mr. Kuyk is.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Vice-pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. O. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 83d annual convention will be held at Milwaukee, June, 1908.

THE death of Marcus Ansley, a venerable fruit grower and former nurseryman at Geneva, N. Y., is reported in the obituary column this week.

F. W. KELSEY, New York, has issued a unique booklet entitled "Nature Menders," intended to promote the sale of rhododendrons, azaleas, evergreens, bay trees, etc.

THE Joliet Nurseries Co., Joliet, Ill., has had a favorable season and has adopted plans for the erection of another greenhouse. Forty acres of land will also be inclosed and prepared for the fall and spring planting. This firm has done a good deal of landscape work for the people of the city.

BENJ. GAGE, of the landscape department of the Peterson Nursery, Chicago, has returned from a fortnight's pleasure trip to Colorado. More than with nature's wonders, he says he was impressed by the character and extent of the landscape work done at Gen. Palmer's estate at Colorado Springs.

THE nursery at Huntsville, Ala., heretofore conducted in the name of John Fraser, has been incorporated as the Fraser Nursery Co., with an authorized capital stock of $30,000. John Fraser is president of the new organization; James Fraser is vice-president, and John Fraser, Jr., is secretary and treasurer.

WILLIAM A. PETERSON, proprietor of the Peterson Nursery, Chicago, is actively engaged in the arrangements for a great revival meeting which is to take place in Chicago during the months of October and November. The meetings will be held in a great tent provided with steam heat. Part of Mr. Peterson's duties are concerned with the raising of a fund of $15,000 to carry on the revival.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

Joseph Cheal, the well-known English nurseryman, has just returned from a tour through Canada and British Columbia, and when we had the pleasure of seeing him a few days since, says the editor of the Gardeners' Magazine, he was certainly not looking any the worse for his journey of 13,450 miles. It need hardly be said that so observant a traveler as Mr. Cheal was much impressed by the evidence of progress that he found in various parts of Canada, and he was more particularly struck by the enormous extension of Winnipeg, which now has an area of twenty square miles. In his journey across the Rocky mountains Mr. Cheal made a break when about halfway across to enable him to go down the Okanagan valley, and visit the fruit farm initiated by Lord Aberdeen about fourteen years ago. This was, Mr. Cheal states, practically the commencement of the fruit-growing industry in British Columbia. The estate is now managed by a company, and the 13,000 acres are being cleared, divided into farms, and planted with fruit trees. These farms are being let and sold to settlers, while many hundred acres of fruit plantations and nurseries are retained by the company. The older plantations of apples were bearing heavy crops, and these were being severely thinned. The summers are dry, hence irrigation is necessary to bring the fruit to perfection. Mr. Cheal has a very favorable impression of British Columbia as a fruit-producing country, but as yet the fruit-growing industry is in its infancy.

GRAFTING EVERGREENS.

Stock of white spruce on which the finer varieties of picea are to be grafted should by this time be at least potted, and so much the better if potted a couple of weeks ago. They will now, if they had been kept sufficiently shaded, be out of danger of wilting. Water should be given to such stock only in sufficient quantities to sustain them; overwatering is liable to rot the roots. Quite enough water will reach the roots from the syringing necessary in order to keep utes, our actual knowledge of plant diseases, the best methods of combating them and the progress that has been made, together with a suggestion or two as to some improvements that may be expected in the future. In accepting the invitation I was fully aware that I could not in so short a time begin to cover so much ground with a sufficient degree of thoroughness to give an adequate idea even of the most important bearings of pathology on horticulture, but I concluded that the committee must have had in mind that I would use their request as an illustration of the greatest failing, not only in pathological investigation but in the application of methods recommended for the control of diseases; namely, too much haste and lack of thoroughness. These are failings incident to work in a new country under great pressure, where the field is large and the workers few. There has been a good measure of economic justification for the mistakes of the past, and they are teaching us valuable lessons for our guidance in the future. What we need now to do is to carefully study these successes and failures and determine as accurately as may be possible their causes, as a basis for improved practice. The old conditions are rapidly changing; the new times require more careful and intensive methods.

Varieties Unsited to Climate.

One-crop farming, too short and unwise crop rotations, improper methods of fertilizing and culture, with destruction of humus and the life and fertility of the soil, careless methods of propagation and seed selection, the use of varieties not adapted to soil and climate, or other limiting conditions, are responsible for loss from diseases in a larger degree than is realized. An orange, a plum, or peach, or apple, or any other tree or shrub, whose cambium responds to a few warm days in winter or early spring, is not a

THREE FLORISTS' PEONIES

As we contemplate discontinuing this branch of our business, we offer the following Grand Varieties at a price within reach of all. Quotations are for Strong, Original, 3-5 eyed pieces. Large, undivided clumps quoted on application.

Rosea Superba—This combines more points of excellence than any other pink variety. Very strong grower; tall and free flowering. Beautiful deep violet-rose blooms of perfect form and good substance. Late. We especially recommend this to the trade as a commercial pink.

Grandiflora Alba—The Popular Florists' White. Often sold for Festiva Maxima, which, when in full bloom, it closely resembles. Strong, healthy plant; large, fragrant flowers on good stem. Guards flushed pink, also crimson splashed center, but changes to pure, snowy white at maturity.

Henri Demay—Robust grower. Very large and full blooms; brilliant crimson; exceedingly fragrant; late. A most beautiful and one of the best dark flowered sorts.

safe variety to plant in localities where such warm periods occur. Plants of northern range, accustomed to respond to lower initial heat stimulus, are thus subject to winter injury in more southern latitudes. On the other hand, plants of southern range planted north start later, are less subject to late frosts, but may be injured by early frosts. These cold injuries are often hardly noticeable, but they are sufficient to weaken the plant and open the way for trunk cankers and numerous other parasitic diseases which the trees could otherwise resist.

Varieties Unsited to Soil.

A soil slightly too acid or alkaline for a particular variety, though not enough to prevent growth, may nevertheless weaken the root system and, in fact, the whole plant, making it subject to serious disease. So, also, the moisture or temperature fluctuations of the soil and its aeration may be unfavorable to a particular variety, making it less resistant to disease, if not actually causing a pathological condition in itself. Too little attention has been given to these factors by the farmers and horticulturists, as well as by the pathologists.

An important duty in this new century will be to develop a better appreciation and more accurate understanding of the relation of these factors to health and disease. The cropping system of a farm or orchard, the planting of a nursery or a park, to be satisfactory and successful in securing healthy growth, must be undertaken only after a careful consideration of all these factors involved. Like the architect, the horticulturist and the farmer must have a carefully thought-out plan and as nearly as possible see the end from the beginning.

PACIFIC COAST.

L. NELSON, who recently sold his interest in the Bay Shore Nursery Co., Millbrae, has started in business at Redwood City, Cal.

ACACIAS.

For planting on dry hillsides in California there are no better trees than Acacia mollissima and A. melanoxylon. Three years ago I planted two A. mollissima on a very dry hillside in July, expecting to later give them one or two waterings, as it was late in the season and the ground already rather dry. Through accident this was not done; nevertheless the trees took hold and have since made an excellent growth. Melanoxylon has done about as well under similar conditions. The great beauty of mollissima when in bloom is well known, and the delicate, fernlike foliage is universally admired. I wonder if it is equally well known that this tree supplies excellent firewood? An old tree that was blown down by a winter gale was cut into firewood and I found it fully equal if not superior to blue gum. In places where the blue gum is used so freely as to become monotonous—and there are many such—I believe Acacia mollissima can be recommended as not only more beautiful but of nearly equal economic value. O. R. L.

OUTDOOR ROSES FOR CUTTING.

Should we be favored this year with our usual mild winter and warm autumn, a bed of outdoor roses is a desirable addition to any grower's stock of cut flowers. Roses, if they have been dried out in the summer, will, by the addition of moisture, cultivation and a heavy mulching of manure, give a succession of flowers from the first part of October to Christmas. If the plants have been watered to a considerable extent during the summer, they will not begin to flower as freely with the advent of recultivation as if they were dormant.

It makes but little difference whether the roses are on their own roots or whether they are budded or grafted. It is a good plan, however, to plant all grafted roses deep enough in the soil so that roots can be freely made from the union. As only strong-growing kinds are of any use to plant for this purpose, they should be well pruned along the lateral branches, so that the shoots will have a tendency to grow erect and strong. Hybrid perpetual roses are the strongest growers and produce the longest and stiffest stems. There are a few teas, however, that can be depended on to give quantities of blooms.

Of the white sorts, I have found Mme. Alfred Carrier and Gloire Lyonnaise to be the best for the purpose. They should be heavily pruned and will give quantities of large, erect flowers that, if the weather is favorable, will compare favorably with indoor stock. Of yellows, the old-fashioned Safrano is the best of the late bloomers. Marie Van Houtte can also be depended on for a goodly quantity. In pink shades there is quite a range of kinds. La France, Testout and Mrs. John Laing have proven to be the most desirable, and Duchess de Brabant and Papa Gontier are easily the best tea roses to plant. In brighter shades, Jacqueminot is an old stand-by, but it will not give the quantity of flowers that can be had from Ulrich Brunner or Liberty. The former produces flowers almost as good as those from under glass. Cecil Brunner is also a good autumn and winter flowering variety.

The quantity and quality of the flowers produced by any of the roses outside during the fall and winter depend to a great extent on the weather, but it does not take many blooms usually to represent quite a quantity of dollars in the winter time. All the varieties mentioned are equally good bloomers in the spring and will produce heavily at the two seasons provided they are given a good rest in the summer, plenty of enrichment and care taken in the pruning. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Flowers are scarcer than they have been for several months. There is a shortage of everything. Asters are over for this year and chrysanthemums are not yet in full supply. Carnations still are being brought into town with short stems, from the freshly planted stock, but they are daily showing better form and color. The price has not advanced and the demand is good, especially for whites. A few good roses are being shown, of the pink sorts, but Beauties and good white varieties are not to be had unless the dealers are satisfied with short-stemmed material.

Violets have dropped in price to $1 per dozen bunches, but they are not of ready sale, owing to the fact that the weather has been unfavorable both to their growing and keeping. With longer and cooler nights we can expect plenty of flowers in a few weeks. Sweet peas are in fair demand, but they are invariably short-stemmed and are being used principally in funeral work.

Business has been good, considering the season, for the last two weeks and there has been a stiff demand for almost everything. The growers are, however, still practically between seasons and a full supply of the ordinary lines of stock cannot be expected for several weeks. Valley is plentiful and has been closer cut than at any time this season. Japanese lilies are out of season, with the exception of a few auratums. Over in Oakland business is reported to be good by all the retail dealers.

SUMMIT, N. J.

An event of special interest to the trade took place at Newark September 18, when Harry O. May and Miss Charlotte M. Jenkinson were married at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Jenkinson, in the presence of 100 friends.

The ceremony took place under an arch of ferns and palms, filled in with white roses. The whole of the first floor was festooned with wild smilax, ferns and palms, and the parlor and library were banked with white roses, the dining-room with pink roses on the mantel and in the center of the table. The billiard room was also decorated with white roses. The bride carried a bouquet of orchids, gardenias and valley. The bridesmaids, one of whom was Mr. May's sister, carried bouquets of La France roses.

Mr. and Mrs. May left that evening for Rangeley, Me., where they have taken a bungalow for a month. After their return they will live at 41 Pine Grove avenue, Summit, in a new house built especially for the young couple by Mr. May's father.

Harry O. May is well known in the trade as a skillful rose grower, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John N. May and the treasurer of the American Rose Society.

CARNATION SARAH HILL, ACTUAL SIZE.

SARAH HILL

The largest free-flowering white carnation ever produced; the form is beautiful and displays the size to the very best advantage; color very pure; texture excellent; stem extra long at all times of the year; a startling novelty, producing flowers with great freedom. Grandest novelty for 1908.

Lawson-Enchantress or SUPERIOR

At last we can give you Enchantress with Lawson color. This is not a sport from Enchantress, but a seedling, but it resembles Enchantress in every respect. Guaranteed to be as we represent it. Every one who grows Lawson or Enchantress will want to grow this variety. Early delivery as yet.

Either variety at $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Send for Circular.

MONTREAL.

The Market.

Business is quickly picking up. There have been an unusually large number of weddings this month, the orders for them being well divided among us all.

Flowers are more abundant. There are still dozens of asters in all the stores, roses are beginning to look better, and some Enchantress carnations from the west are good indeed, though not plentiful. Some of the mums in the greenhouses of Hall & Robinson are open and ready for cutting.

Various Notes.

The Montreal horticultural show was held in the Victoria rink. On account of the wet weather prevailing at the time, the attendance was not good, though the exhibits were fine.

We have yet another florist in our midst. Miss Carmichael, who was in J. Bennett's store for a number of years, has opened one for herself, with her sister as assistant. It is situated on St. Catherine street west, midway between the stores of Mr. Bain and P. McKenna & Son.

Hall & Robinson's store was beautifully decorated this week, and many pleasing remarks were heard about the interior of the store as well as the window. Their new greenhouses are nearly finished.

W. Gray is now in the wholesale business for himself and reports everything to be very good.

Miss K. Campbell has returned from a few weeks' trip to Buffalo. Miss Legg is with Campbell's again and they are now ready for the fall rush.

Frank McKenna has returned from Buffalo, where he was for a few days.

TOMMY.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Under the name of the Birmingham Florists' and Horticultural Society, the florists of the city have organized and will give two semi-annual shows. The membership is open to all florists, landscape and park gardeners and the object is the exchange of ideas in growing, as well as to inspire the amateur and furnish him with information. The membership is now thirty-two and the officers are as follows: President, Hugh Seals; vice-president, G. B. McVay; secretary, Alex. Sawyer; treasurer, Andrew Hague. The society will hold monthly meetings, on the first Tuesday.

PEKIN, ILL.—Geo. A. Kuhl will dispose of his grocery business to devote his entire time to his greenhouses.

Dreer Specials in Ferns

PTERIS WILSONI We feel very enthusiastic over this fern; it is not only the most graceful, but also one of the hardiest of the crested forms of Pteris, useful in fern-dishes as well as for growing on into specimen plants in 6-inch pans; in this size it appeals to every buyer and meets with ready sales. We have a fine lot of 6-inch pans, $1.50 per dozen; $35.00 per 100, and elegant young stock for growing on 2½-inch pots at $3.50 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

Adiantum Farleyense A fine lot of 6-inch pots now ready, $1.00 each.

Adiantum Rhodophyllum The miniature Farleyense, as it is sometimes called, very fine plants, 3-inch pots, $10.00 per 100.

Adiantum Macrophyllum The bronzy red or almost crimson foliage of this variety during the fall months appeals to all. This is the first time we have been able to offer it in quantity and at a popular price; fine 3-inch pots, $15.00 per 100.

Adiantum Croweanum We offer a fine lot of this, the most useful and profitable of all the Maidenhair Ferns for cutting; fine 3-inch pot plants, $2.00 per dozen; $15.00 per 100; $140.00 per 1000.

Nephrolepis Amerpohlii—The Philadelphia Lace Fern—This is the latest addition to the Ostrich Plume type and is certain to prove a welcome and popular variety, holding for delicacy and gracefulness the same position among the Nephrolepis that Adiantum Gracillimum does among the Maidenhair Ferns. The pinnae are so finely divided that it reminds one of a piece of fine lace; the fronds are broad and of a depth which gives them a cushion-like appearance. It forms a beautiful specimen and is admired by everyone who sees it. 50c each; $3.50 per dozen; $25.00 per 100; $200.00 per 1000.

Nephrolepis Todeaoides—Todea, or Filmy Fern-like Nephrolepis—This is an English introduction that has received a first-class certificate both from the Royal Horticultural Society and from the Royal Botanic Society of London, and is likely to become a most important commercial variety. While in a general way it reminds one of an exceptionally well-grown plant of N. Elegantisima, it is entirely distinct from this and all others, in its strong yet compact growth and its bold heavy foliage, which is distinctly tripinnate or three times divided. Specimen plants which we now have growing are admired by everyone and we have great faith in its future. 4-inch pots, ready Oct. 1st, 50c each; $5.00 per dozen; $40.00 per 100; 6-inch pots, ready now, fine plants, $1.00 each.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Albert T. Hey, president of the State Florists' Association, who directed the work of preparing for the children's flower show September 14, declares that the results attained by the show far surpassed the expectations of the most sanguine. No one, not even the florists, believed that there was so much general interest in the cultivation of flowers among the people of Springfield. Mr. Hey attributed the interest shown largely to the efforts of the Woman's Club during the early spring and summer in getting the children of the city into the work.

"The only mistake we made," said Mr. Hey, "was in not providing more accommodations for the exhibits. But we had not the slightest idea of what we were to get, and everyone underrated the interest the people of Springfield were taking in the show."

"What little mistakes were made have only cleared the path for a show next year. With the experience in handling this show, the second annual flower show should prove an event indeed."

One of those particularly impressed with the show was James Wilson, of Chicago, who was in charge of the judging. Mr. Wilson declared that for a first attempt the show was the best he had ever seen. The display of asters by private individuals was one of the best he had ever seen.

DULUTH, MINN.

The weather has been bad this week, which has made trade slow.

Asters are nearly gone, but carnations are coming in to take their place. Gladioli sell well and bring a fair price.

B. G. Evans, of W. W. Seekins', is at work after a well earned vacation, which he spent in hunting.

Victor Huot has had a fairly good week. H. G. V.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

Current Comment.

The supply of flowers just now is big. There are plenty of asters coming in. Carnations in the house are in bloom. These are good flowers, but the stems are rather short as yet. They retail all the way from 25 cents to 50 cents per dozen. Nearly all carnation plants are now housed, and what are left in the field are growing fairly well, owing to the late copious rains we have had. Violet plants are looking extremely well, so far.

Sunday, September 8, was flower day in the cemeteries here. All report the demand for flowers on this day as very encouraging. It will be repeated again next year.

Sweet peas are about all done for this season. Mums are looking well and there will be a good supply of them in this section.

The Winsor carnations grown by Peter Murray, the originator, at his Fairhaven place, are in splendid shape. This is destined to be a grand variety.

At the last monthly meeting of the New Bedford Horticultural Society, held in the rooms of the Y. M. C. A. building, H. A. Jahn, T. White and J. McVickers were appointed judges of the exhibition. Six out of seven dahlia exhibits were by amateurs. There was a fine collection of dahlias and gladioli. There were some interesting addresses and discussions.

W. L.

WETHERSFIELD, CONN.—Henry S. Griswold has started in the florists' business here.

MUSKOGEE, I. T.—C. E. Taube, manager of the Muskogee Carnation Co., has returned from an extended visit in the east. Mrs. Taube and daughter, Hilda, sailed from New York September 6, for Germany, where Miss Hilda will enter a conservatory of music.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—James Souden, who was for many years in the flower department of the L. S. Donaldson Co., has opened a store of his own at 106 Sixth street south. The formal opening was held September 14 and the store was beautifully decorated for the occasion.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The People's Floral Co. has opened a new store at 821 Walnut street. The store at Twelfth and Main streets will also be continued, and much of the stock for the two stores will be obtained from the company's own greenhouses. Though Max Eller, the proprietor, has been in business here less than three years, he has developed a large trade.

FACTS, ONLY FACTS

If you wish to transform your store
 To a palace of beauty galore,
 Then all that you buy
 Aschmann must supply,
 And you'll be constantly sending for more.

What do you think: when will you start in?
DO IT NOW Waiting means suicide. I always act as quickly as I think, and have been successful; learn and do it likewise.

ARAUCARIAS our specialty. Watch us grow.

1907 is our 12th anniversary in a successful career in the importation, growing and shipping of those well-known and well admired evergreen decorative plants.

The Araucaria Excelsa, Robusta, Compacta and Excelsa Glauca. Our importation this spring, 1907, has swollen up to the enormous amount of 6000. More are coming on with the azaleas, Sept. and Oct. By buying now your plants will grow into money 100 per cent in 2 or 3 months. Next in rank come our Nephrolepis or Ferns, of which we have only the best selling varieties. A big lot of Boston, Elegantissima, Whitmani and Scottii. Have 8 large houses full in all salable sizes; all pot-grown, not bench grown. Our ferns are not forced or grown in shady houses, but were grown in sunny houses; ventilators open day and night. Such treatment makes hardy, stiff fronds and strong, stout plants. Can be shipped 5,000 miles without injury in transportation.

Now is the best time to ship; as you can ship safely by freight.

Horticultural Books

We can supply any of the following books at the prices noted, postpaid, and any other book at publishers' price:

Pronouncing Dictionary.

A list of plant names and the botanical terms most frequently met with in articles on trade topics, with the correct pronunciation for each. 25 cents

The American Carnation.

By C. W. WARD. Invaluable to the carnation grower. All departments of the business are treated in a thoroughly practical manner. This book is the work of a careful, studious grower of ripe experience. Fully illustrated. $3.50

The Florists' Manual.

By WILLIAM SCOTT. Covers the whole field of commercial floriculture. Articles are arranged alphabetically so that reference is quick and easy. It tells you just what you want to know in just the way you want to be told. $5.00

The Pruning Book.

By L. H. BAILEY. This is the first American work exclusively devoted to pruning. It differs from most other treatises on this subject in that the author takes particular pains to explain the principles of each operation in every detail. Specific advice is given on the pruning of the various kinds of fruits and ornamental trees, shrubs and hedges. Considerable space is devoted to the pruning and training of grape vines, both American and foreign. Cloth. 530 pages. Illustrated. $1.50

Greenhouse Heating.

SLOPE OF STEAM PIPES.

We are heating our greenhouse with steam. The pipes are four feet above the boiler at the farther end and the returns are six inches above at the main return. Will any valve or trap be needed to put the water back into the boiler? If so, what kind? B. B. & C.

If I understand your statement correctly there should be little difficulty in returning the water in this system, although it would be better if the returns near the boiler were at least two feet above it. If the returns are four feet higher than the boiler at the distant end, will it not be possible to lessen the grade in the returns and increase the vertical drop to the main return near the boiler to at least two feet, or two feet and a half? This would be a great safeguard. In any event, place a swing check valve in the main return. If the system does not work well, give a more complete description of the plant and we will endeavor to give you further assistance. L. C. C.

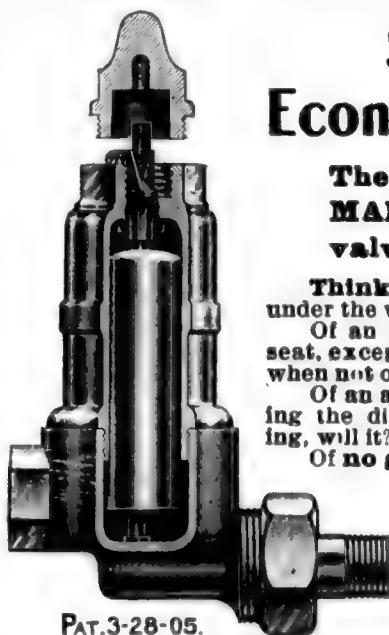

PIPING IN PENNSYLVANIA.

I will build a propagating house at once, 16x40 feet, ten feet to the ridge, and exposed on all sides. I should like to get your advice in regard to heating it with hot water or steam. I will add sixty feet more in the spring and will heat from another building then.

What size of grate surface will I need to heat to 50 degrees, with zero temperature outside, 6,600 feet of glass, ten feet to ridge, houses 66x100 feet? J. G. S.

If you heat the propagating house with steam, install a 2-inch flow or riser under the ridge and twelve 1½-inch pipes as returns under the benches. If you use hot water, use a 2-inch flow under the ridge and twelve 2-inch returns under the benches, or use one of the pipes under each of the three benches as a supply and three as returns, thus making three flows and nine returns in the house.

To heat the bank of houses 66x100, it will be necessary to install twenty-six lines of 1½-inch pipe, supplied from a 2-inch flow under each ridge; or, if hot water in 2-inch pipe is used, install twenty-four 2-inch returns, to be sup-

Steam Heating on an Economical Vacuum Principle

The Simonds Automatic Vacuum Valve has MANY advantages over any other vacuum valve in the world.

Think of a ½-inch valve with a ¾-inch clear discharge opening under the valve. They won't easily clog with dirt or rust, will they?

Of an air discharge valve above the water line and tight on its seat, except while water discharge valve is open. Can't waste steam when not open, can it?

Of an adjustment to this air discharge valve that allows of reducing the discharge to a pin point. Won't waste steam when discharging, will it?

Of no guide wings or pins under water discharge valve.

Of an allowance for adjusting both valves on their seats after all is heated up, and expansion has taken place.

Pretty near the correct principle, ain't it?

Our Compound Vacuum Steam Heating System combines with the valve to secure the highest economy in steam, and complete circulation in even the largest heating areas.

plied by a 2½-inch flow under each ridge. The boiler in either case should have a rated capacity for 1,800 to 2,000 square feet of radiation. L. C. C.

PIPING IN MISSOURI.

I am erecting an addition to an old house. Will you please state how much 1-inch pipe I will need for heating, as I would like to run 1½-inch pipe for feeding overhead? The new addition is 18x36 feet. The side walls are five feet high and it measures eleven feet and one-half to the ridge. The house runs east and west; the northern exposure is all boards up to the gutter. Both gable ends are glass and the south side is partly glass. I will carry twelve pounds of steam and would like to keep the house at 60 degrees in zero weather. M. H.

To heat the room 18x36 with steam, using 1-inch pipe, it will be necessary to install seventeen returns, which can be supplied from the 1½-inch flow under the ridge. It will be well to provide valves on some of the returns, so as to throw them out of commission during mild weather. L. C. C.

J. Y.

If the pipe is arranged as suggested, with two lines under one bench and three under the other, use a flow and return under one and a flow and two returns under the other. To heat the same house by the use of 2-inch pipe, ten lines of pipe will be necessary, placing a flow and five returns under the wide bench and a flow and three returns under the narrow bench. With 2-inch pipe, the flows can be run overhead if so desired, instead of as suggested.

TEST OF HEATING SYSTEM.

Charles N. Hays is a Pittsburg heating engineer who came to Chicago for the purpose of showing the western people, who are large consumers of fuel, that he can burn the western coals in a manner to conform to the city smoke regulations and upon an economical basis. He purposed doing this with what is known as the McClave system, which he had installed in many Pittsburg plants and which provides for the consumption of smoke by means of automatically regulated forced draft. A set of deflecting walls is built beneath the boiler for the purpose of retarding the passage of the heated gases and thereby getting the full benefit of them. Recently Mr. Hays undertook to interest the greenhouse people north of Chicago and last week made a test of his system under a boiler at Peter Reinberg's which he had equipped at his own expense for the trial. Frank S. Peabody, president of the Peabody Coal Co., a large producer of Illinois coals, naturally is interested in any device for extending the use of his grade of coal, and was present with a number of owners of near-by greenhouses. The Peabody coal, costing $2.35 per ton, against $3.75 for Pocahontas, was used, with the result that the heating engineer figured that on his test the McClave system produced heat for Mr. Reinberg at a cost of slightly less than 4 mills per horsepower per hour, and that under his old system the cost was 6 mills per horsepower per hour. At the same time the efficiency of the boiler was increased from eighty horse-power to an average of 136 horse-power. Firing with a load of 200 pounds of coal the chimney smoked less than half a minute, while firing with any of the so-called smokeless coals the duration of smoke would be several minutes. Laying aside the technical features of the engineer's report of the test, he assured Mr. Reinberg that there would be a saving of twenty-five per cent in his fuel bills. Mr. Reinberg is said to have last season expended $36,000 for coal. He accepted the apparatus as fitted up for the test and gave an order to at once equip two other boilers.

After a lively discussion on the subject, a motion was made by Harry Papworth not to have any. The vote of the members was favorable to the motion and it was agreed among them that only an informal exhibit of plants will be made about that time. No location was selected.

A state exhibit took place lately at Jeanerette, a small, thriving place in Louisiana. It seems to have been a success as far as the exhibit of horticultural products was concerned. Only one florist from New Orleans was represented, but C. W. Eichling says that there is a good opening for business there. People are interested in flowers.

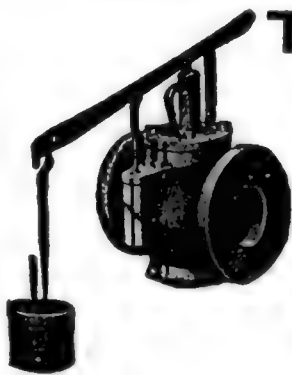

Charles Eble is quite proud of the distinction he received at the convention for his new fern. He invited the society to hold its next meeting at his residence. He is ready to move to his former quarters, now rebuilt, on Baronne street, near Canal street.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

For the last week the weather has been ideal in Buffalo. As a result stock indoors is improved very much, but outdoor stock, with the exception of gladioli and dahlias, is poor. Dahlias continue to be of good quality and take the place of asters very nicely, except for funeral work. Indoor stock is improving daily, but still far short of the demand. Killarney, Richmond and Beauties are of good quality. Maids and Brides are still short, but welcome.

At this particular season of the year there is always trouble with stock, but the early planting has eliminated this to a large extent. Carnations are arriving more and more plentifully every day and are of good quality, but rather short-stemmed.

Various Notes.

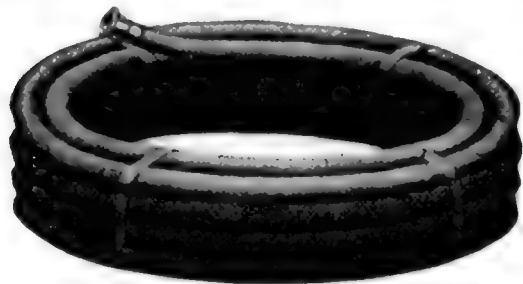

The new gladiolus, a canary yellow, has found very ready sale in Buffalo and we hope Mr. Fennell will grow more next season, as the spikes sold before they were out of the box at the commission house.

A. G. McElhinney, of Franklin, Pa., was a visitor last week. This same man at one time grew vegetables entirely, but bought the "Florists' Manual" and is now a practical florist, all his knowledge being gained from this book.

DUTCH BULBS

TULIPS FOR BEDDING.

Soil and Fertilizer.

For bedding purposes tulips are far preferable to hyacinths. They are less expensive, give more brilliant and telling color effects and last much longer in flower. It is not surprising that their use outdoors is advancing with leaps and bounds, for they are not by any means fussy as to soil and location, as are some of the hardy bulbs, for while a sandy loam of good depth suits them best, they will give excellent results in any good soil which has been well worked over and in which a good proportion of well decayed manure has been incorporated. Fresh manure is positively hurtful to tulips and all other bulbs. Cow manure is the best animal fertilizer to use. This is used almost exclusively in the Holland bulb fields.

In planting beds a depth of four to five inches to the bottom of the bulbs, varying according to their size, and five to six inches apart each way is about right if a really good effect is wanted. Care should always be taken to plant the bulbs at an even depth, so as to have them all bloom together. Use some sand below the bulbs in stiff soil. In sandy soil tulips always make the finest and cleanest bulbs. Good drainage is essential to success, for while tulips love moisture, water must not stand where they are planted.

Planting and Covering.

The time to plant depends on the locality: In the more northern states, from the end of September until the end of October, and a month later farther south. While tulips are one of the hardiest of bulbs, they are benefited by a winter mulch of leaves or strawy manure, which should not, however, be placed on the beds until they are well frozen; and care must be taken to remove it carefully early in the spring. A heavy covering is not wanted; just sufficient to prevent continual heaving of the ground from frost, especially in February and March.

A common query asked by customers who have purchased a few bulbs is, "Will they bloom all right a second year?" Of course it is not to a dealer's advantage to have the bulbs carried a second season, and few ever do so, or succeed if they try, but if the flowers are removed early and the plants allowed to well mature the bulbs before lifting and storing, good results may be attained in succeeding years. But where, as is usually the case, flowers are left on, seed pods allowed to develop and the bulbs dug up as soon as the blooms are gone, it does not pay to plant a second season. The early bedding tulips do not wear so well in America as do the Darwins and other late varieties.

Best Single Bedders.

For bedding purposes the single varieties are much superior to the double ones, although some few of the latter are worthy of culture. A selection of the best singles is as follows:

Four splendid whites are Joost Van Vondel, White Hawk, White Pottebakker and White Swan. The last named blooms later than the other sorts. Of the four sorts I consider the first named the best.

In pinks the best is undoubtedly the beautiful satiny rose-colored Queen of the Netherlands. The rose and white variety Pink Beauty is also superb. Both these are still rather high priced. Cheaper varieties are Cottage Maid and Rosamundi Huikman. In reds and crimsons General Gould (syn.: Sir Thomas Lipton) is a magnificent deep scarlet, but not listed by many dealers. Maes is fine. Of inexpensive sorts Vermilion Brilliant and Belle Alliance are good. Couleur Cardinal is a fine rich crimson, very effective in a solid bed.

The orange shades are immensely popular. Standard, white and crimson, are worthy of a place in every garden.

Among doubles, Murillo, white shaded rose; Couronne d'Or, old gold; Imperator rubrorum, crimson scarlet, and Tournesol, scarlet, edged yellow, are good, the two first named being the most desirable.

Late-flowering and Darwin Sorts.

In the late-flowering class the following singles are deserving of increased use; they bloom when the early tulips are gone, have longer stems and last a long time in bloom: Bouton d'Or, yellow; Gesneriana, scarlet; Elegans, scarlet; Picotee, white and carmine; Parisian Yellow, bright yellow; Isabella, cream shaded rose; Vitellina, creamy yellow, and Golden Cream, yellow, edged red.

In the magnificent Darwin section such varieties as Gretchen, Edmond Rostand, Glow, Gretchen, Fire King, and Pride of Haarlem are a few specially fine ones. These latter, in my estimation, quite outclass the early flowering sorts Tulip Proserpine, Carmine-rose.

ular. Of these Prince of Austria and Thomas Moore are excellent, the latter in my estimation being the more effective. The old Duchess of Parma, red, edged with yellow, is also very desirable. In golden yellows Chrysolora is the best of the low priced varieties. Yellow Prince and Gold Finch are better for forcing than bedding. Ophir d'Or and Mon Tresor both are fine. In other shades, Proserpine, carmine rose; Keizerskroon, scarlet, bordered yellow, and Royal and it is astonishing that they are yet so little seen in our public parks and private gardens.

Arrangement of Colors.

Mixed beds of single tulips are quite pleasing, better far than many of the distressing color creations secured from planting lines and circles of a variety of shades. One variety in a bed is much better than if the bed is treated like a piece of carpet bedding. The Boston

Public Gardens last season initiated the plan of having large solid beds of one variety and this method of planting proved very effective. Some of these beds are pictured in this issue of the REVIEW and the practice is worthy of more general adoption. The beds of such standard sorts as Pink Beauty, Prince of Austria, Joost Van Vondel, White Swan, Couleur Cardinal, Keizerskroon and others were extremely telling. To cover the ground, such plants as violas in several colors, daisies and forget-me-nots are used. Where the flowers are pots throughout, says a writer in an English trade paper.

TULIPS FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

What are the best tulips for outdoor blooming for Memorial day? I. E. L.

For late May-flowering tulips we prefer the Darwins. They are perfectly hardy and produce large flowers of fine substance, that stand well when cut. The varieties embrace a fine assortment of colors, so that one has no trouble in get-that region under the supervision of the department. The climatic conditions of the Puget Sound region are especially favorable to the development of tulip and narcissus bulbs, and it is probable that the corner stone of the American bulb industry will soon be laid in that region. We are coöperating with commercial men who are endeavoring to develop the industry, and plans are already under way for a considerable extension of the work."

RETARDED VALLEY.

We hear much of catch crops in the garden, but catch crops in the greenhouse scarcely seem to have such a vogue. And yet most growers know that there are times when such a greenhouse catch crop would be extremely useful, notably in early autumn. A useful catch crop at this season may be found in lilies of the valley. Retarded crowns are of course to be used, and they may be either potted or boxed; I have found 5-inch pots most generally useful. Planting should be done somewhat thickly. Flowers should be produced in from three weeks to a month from the time of potting, if kept nicely moist in a spare corner of a greenhouse.

VARIETIES OF NARCISSUS.

I am located in a district in California where narcissi do finely and I can produce good bulbs on a commercial basis. But I have too many varieties and too few of each. Will you kindly tell me which ones are the leading trade sorts and about the proportion in which they are called for? Any suggestions relating to the growing of narcissus bulbs in California for the eastern trade will be more than welcome. L. B. C.

I give below a list of the leading varieties of narcissus in the order of their importance for forcing and planting out in the eastern states: Narcissus Paper White grandiflora, for forcing only; Von Sion, double; Golden Spur, Empress, Emperor, Horsfieldii, poeticus ornatus, and poeticus. There are thirty or forty other varieties of narcissus more or less in demand, a list of which can be obtained by consulting the catalogue of any first-class seed house. I know nothing of the dark, the groundwork should be light, and vice versa.

A pretty circular bed may be had by planting a broad cross of a red, like Couleur Cardinal, and filling the intervening spaces with White Swan. Care should always be taken in planting several colors in a bed not to use white with yellow or scarlet with crimson. Flowers with mixed colors should be planted by themselves. Keizerskroon makes a superb bed by itself, but a band or cross of white utterly spoils it. The decadence of carpet bedding has helped to kill the design style of planting tulips and the change is truly a wholesome one. The ribbon border style is still popular with some, but mass planting of solid colors is rapidly displacing it.

Where there are a number of beds to be planted, the high colors, like red and crimson, if used, should be nearest the outside of the garden and farthest from the observation points. Soft colors should always predominate. Some rather harsh bulbous effects can be tolerated by reason of the fact that we are glad to see these harbingers of spring after the long winter, and they do not stay sufficiently long in bloom to pall upon us, as summer bedding might do.

W. N. CRAIG.

POTTING VAN THOL TULIPS.

The most generally useful way of growing the small, but early, bright-colored Van Thol tulips is to place six good bulbs in a 5-inch pot, one bulb in the middle, and five around the sides. But some pretty little plants may be obtained by placing one good bulb in a thumb pot, using fairly good loam, and feeding well when the foliage commences to expand. These small pots are exceedingly useful for table decoration, or for filling the small fancy dishes found on many tables. If preferred, the bulbs can be grown in boxes, and placed in small pots when about to commence flowering. Personally, however, I prefer growing them in ting just the shade he wants. Most of the trade catalogues describe and give colors of the varieties, which makes it a simple matter to make a selection, or you will find a fine article, with numerous illustrations, in the REVIEW of June 13, 1907.

WM. SCOTT.

BULBS ON PUGET SOUND.

In his address before the Congress of Horticulture at the Jamestown exposition last week Prof. B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, related what the government is doing to assist the trade and, referring to bulb culture, he spoke as follows:

"Investigations are being carried on in the encouragement of the production of tulips, narcissi and hyacinths on the Pacific coast. At the present time three gardens are being maintained in culture of narcissus bulbs and would not presume to advise a practical grower. The varieties mentioned above comprise ninety per cent of the narcissi sold by the florists and seed trade throughout the United States.

Tulip Royal Standard, Red and Yellow.

Tulip White Swan, Pure White; Pansies Under the Tulips.

ARTHUR T. BODDINGTON.

Answering the inquiry made above, we herewith give the names of the leading narcissus bulbs which are in demand today in the commercial market: Single varieties—Campenelle rugulosus, Empress, Giant Princeps, Golden Spur, Trumpet Major, Emperor, Incomparable Stella, Sir Watkin and poeticus. Double varieties—Alba plena odorata, Incomparable double, Orange Phoenix, Sulphur or Silver Phoenix and Von Sion.

In regard to growing narcissus bulbs in California, the writer has not had any direct experience, but provided they are given a good, heavy soil we do not see why they should not do well. So far as we know, narcissus bulbs are not cultivated in California, but it may be that they have never been tried, and it may also be that they will not thrive there. We have shipped a great many of them into California, but presume that they are used for cut flowers.

HENRY F. MICHELL CO.

Regarding the varieties of narcissus, the most successful and largest growers in California confine themselves to fancy single varieties, such as Emperor, Golden Spur, Empress, Sir Watkin, etc. It would not pay to ship a stock of Polyanthus narcissus from Chicago to the Pacific coast, as they are very plentiful out there indeed and bulblets could be purchased much cheaper locally than imported stock could be furnished from Chicago. If L. B. C. lives in southern California, it undoubtedly would pay him to interview C. A. Brazee, Wilmington, Cal., one of the largest growers of bulbs on the Pacific coast; or, if he is anywhere near San Francisco, any of the leading retail florists will substantiate the statement we make above and can tell him the proportion of the best-selling varieties he ought to grow.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Dutch Bulbs.

The time for boxing and potting what are commonly termed Dutch bulbs has again arrived and no time should be lost in getting the bulbs in the soil. While outdoor planting may be better delayed a short time, those required for early flowering under glass, which must fill the pots, pans or flats with roots before they can be successfully forced, should not be allowed to fritter away their strength in bags or boxes. We hope a good pile of compost was prepared, as suggested some time ago. If this was not done, get it in readiness at once. We do not believe that any old soil is good enough for the average run of bulbs. It is true that the embryo flowers are already contained in the bulbs, but the compost used will materially affect the quality of the flowers to be produced. A mixture of two-thirds well decayed loam, one-third well pulverized and rotted cow manure and a liberal addition of sand makes a good potting medium. Some growers add leaf-mold. If your soil is heavy, this will be found advantageous. Bulbs all seem to prefer a rather sandy and porous compost.

After your bulbs are boxed or potted, the question arises as to where to store them. If you have abundant cellar space, we would advise putting them under cover. With many growers such accommodations are wanting, in which event they can be placed in a pit on any ground where water will not stand in winter. Cover with ashes or soil after watering well and remember that more water must be given once in ten days or so for some time, for the flats dry out rapidly and most of the failures in Dutch bulb storing arise from having the soil too dry. By the middle of November leaves or strawy manure can be spread over the soil to exclude frost. Be sure to place large labels where your different varieties are, so that you can pick them out readily when needed. There are many disadvantages in placing the bulbs outdoors and if any cellar or shed is at disposal, by all means utilize it.

Hyacinths.

While less popular as a market flower than tulips, there is still a fair demand for nicely flowered pots and pans of hyacinths. Place one large crock over the drainage, then some of the rougher compost. Fill about two-thirds full, press moderately, drop some sand over the soil, lay the bulbs in position and cover with compost until the noses of the bulbs just show. When potted the soil should be firm but not hard, and a space of three-fourths of an inch left for water. For cutting, use flats four inches deep and set the bulbs moderately thick. The second size or bedding hyacinths answer well for this purpose.

A few good sorts are: Red and pink shades—Gertrude, Robert Steiger, Norma. White—Baroness Van Thuyll, Grandeur à Merveille. Blue—Baron Van Thuyll, King of the Blues, Grand Lilas.

The foregoing are all single varieties and for either indoor or outdoor work are better than the double sorts. Place the flats and pans under cover if possible. In a wet fall the soil will become overwet, get sour and roots decay.

Tulips.

Year by year we are told that bulb forcing is unprofitable, that the market is constantly glutted with bulbous stock of this beautiful early variety. Whether for use in retail work at home or for market purposes, it is unsurpassed. A few other good forcing tulips are Vermilion Brilliant, scarlet; Yellow Prince, yellow; Cottage Maid, pink; Keizerkroon, red and yellow; Proserpine, silky rose; Pottebakker, white, and Chrysolora, yellow.

Pans eight inches in diameter will hold about a dozen bulbs. Flats 12x14 inches and four inches deep will accommodate from seventy-five to 100, according to the variety. Fill the flat with loose soil, after providing good drainage; press in the bulbs and leave them just covered. Make the soil moderately firm. If you do not care to grow any tulips or hyacinths in pots and pans and have any subsequent call for such, you can take the requisite number out of your flats before the flowers open, make up pans and they will look just as well as if they had been grown in them. The tens of thousands of pans grown for the Covent Garden market, London, are all grown in flats and a few small ferns are placed among them in the pans.

In double tulips Murillo and Coronne d'Or are the best sorts to grow.

Narcissi.

It is time now to get in a large batch but cannot be forced early. Some of the Leedsii type, such as Mrs. Langtry and Minnie Hume, are occasionally met with and will some day be largely grown for market.

N. poeticus ornatus is an invaluable sort for early forcing and can be had in bloom by the end of January. The ordinary pheasant's eye narcissus, N. poeticus, is a most useful flower at Easter, for which date it can readily be retarded. The golden, sweet-scented jonquils are useful either in pans or flats. N. rugulosus is the largest and best, but the smaller N. campenelle blooms a little earlier. These jonquils do not need covering like the other narcissi, as they start to grow very quickly after being planted.

Spanish Iris.

Spanish iris is well adapted for forcing and more are being grown each year. For this purpose flats three inches deep answer well, but better success will result if they are an inch deeper. Cover the bulbs two inches deep and keep in a coldframe until November, when they can be stored in any cool, light pit or kept in the frame if protected until needed for forcing. They resent a high temperature. A carnation house suits them nicely. A few good sorts are Leonidas, violet blue; Chrysolora, yellow; British Queen, fine white; Louise and Helena, light blue. The flats need no covering with soil or ashes, as the iris starts to grow within two or three weeks after being planted.

Gladioli.

That old variety, G. Colvillei The Bride, is an inexpensive and useful sort to grow. The flowers are pure white and borne on compact spikes. The variety Blushing Bride, with crimson flakes on the petals, is also a profitable sort to handle. The various forms of G. cardinalis or nanus are even better than G. Colvillei, having larger flowers, stronger spikes, and being less susceptible to rot at the base of the flower stalk. There is quite a wide range of colors in this comparatively little known race, a few specially good ones being Peach Blossom, rosy pink; Salmon Queen, salmon pink; Pink Perfection, rose; Ackermann; orange, and Mathilde, delicate lavender. The culture of these gladioli should be the same as that afforded the Spanish iris. The bulbs can be planted quite thickly and may be used a second year with good success.

ENGLISH TRADE SALES.

The annual auction trade sales in the establishments near London have now been conducted, in the second week of September, by one English firm for thirty-nine years. According to report this season there was a good attendance all round, and in most instances the venders should be well satisfied with the results. There were buyers from all parts of the kingdom, and though no exceptionally high prices were made, in several instances they went higher than they have been the last few years. Palms were much in demand, and brought higher prices than usual, kentias especially so. The ferns claimed the attention of most buyers, those of the ordinary market sorts making what were considered excellent prices. There was not so much competition for the choicer sorts, and those who had use for them got them at considerably reduced prices. The new plumose and that another season fewer growers will handle them, but there is no apparent decrease in their production. It is true that there has not been the tremendous increase in the forcing of this class of bulbs that there has been in their use for outdoor planting, but nevertheless we think there is still a good future for specialists in this line.

Tulips are better market bulbs than hyacinths, both in pans and for cutting. For very early forcing it is not at all easy to handle them successfully. Many will come blind and about all will be dwarf. The earliest of all, the Duc Van Tholls, are too short to become useful. They come in more easily at Christmas than any other sort. Following these comes La Reine, the queen of forcing tulips, a delicate pink in winter and pure white later in the season. No mistake will be made in putting in a large batch of the single and double Von Sion narcissi. The latter remains a good market variety, although double daffodils look singularly coarse compared to the singles. The single Von Sion is commonly known as Trumpet Major. The best of all the golden trumpet section is the popular Golden Spur. Princeps is inexpensive. It is about the poorest of the trumpet daffodils, a flimsy flower with little to recommend it but its cheapness. It still holds a place where cheap flowers are in request, but cannot be placed in the same class as Golden Spur and Sir Henry Irving. The newer Victoria is a magnificent white-winged variety which has now become moderate in price and is worth a trial. Emperor and Empress are favorites and there is a moderate call for the flowers of Sir Watkin, the giant Welsh daffodil. The beautiful Barri Conspectus is excellent for late work, varieties of nephrolepis caused a little competition, and many extra lots had to be made up at the rate of about 24 shillings per dozen for Todeaoides and Whitmani. Small ferns sold well at prices nearly equal to ordinary quotations. Other foliage plants went at about the usual or a little above what they have made previous years.

Tulip Chrysolora, Golden Yellow.

SOW BUGS OR WOOD LICE.

Can you tell me of something that will kill sow bugs? I have tried Paris green in meal, shorts, bran, etc., sweetened as directed in the recipes, but I cannot get the pests to eat it. This is a new place and I have millions of them. They are in my dwelling as well as in my greenhouse. They seem to be partial to Asparagus plumosus and ferns. They eat the young shoots off as fast as they start up. They are in the soil all around here.

T. A. G.

Since the sow bugs do not take kindly to the Paris green, try white arsenic mixed in sweetened bran. If the pests are as numerous as you state, they will be a real menace to successful plant culture. Besides using the poison, you can trap many by laying around some potatoes or turnips with the insides scooped out. Look over these frequently, especially early in the morning, and drop the pests in hot water. Dust the surface of your benches with tobacco dust, which the pests do not like. Try a little Cayenne pepper dropped about their haunts in your dwelling house. Sterilize any soil you use for potting, and if your bench soil is infested use some carbon bisulphide, dropping a little in holes eighteen inches apart each way, covering the holes at once. This will not harm the plants. Do not leave any rubbish under your benches, as that would make congenial hiding places for them. A few cans of boiling water poured into their haunts will kill large quantities.

PANSIES FOR WINTER BLOOM.

When pansies are wanted for winter blooming should they be allowed to freeze before bringing in? How early will they bloom in a cool house with solid benches? Seed sown about August 1.

L. D.

A little freezing will prove beneficial to any pansies which are to be under glass for cut flowers. Treatment and temperature should not vary much from that afforded single violets. If kept just clear of freezing at night, they will do well. You will probably not get many flowers until the new year, February being as early as the plants will bloom with anything like freedom. Avoid extremes of temperature and do not on any consideration try coddling in the hopes of getting an early crop of bloom. Heat reduces the size of the flowers and soon spoils the plants.

HARDINESS OF HIBISCUS.

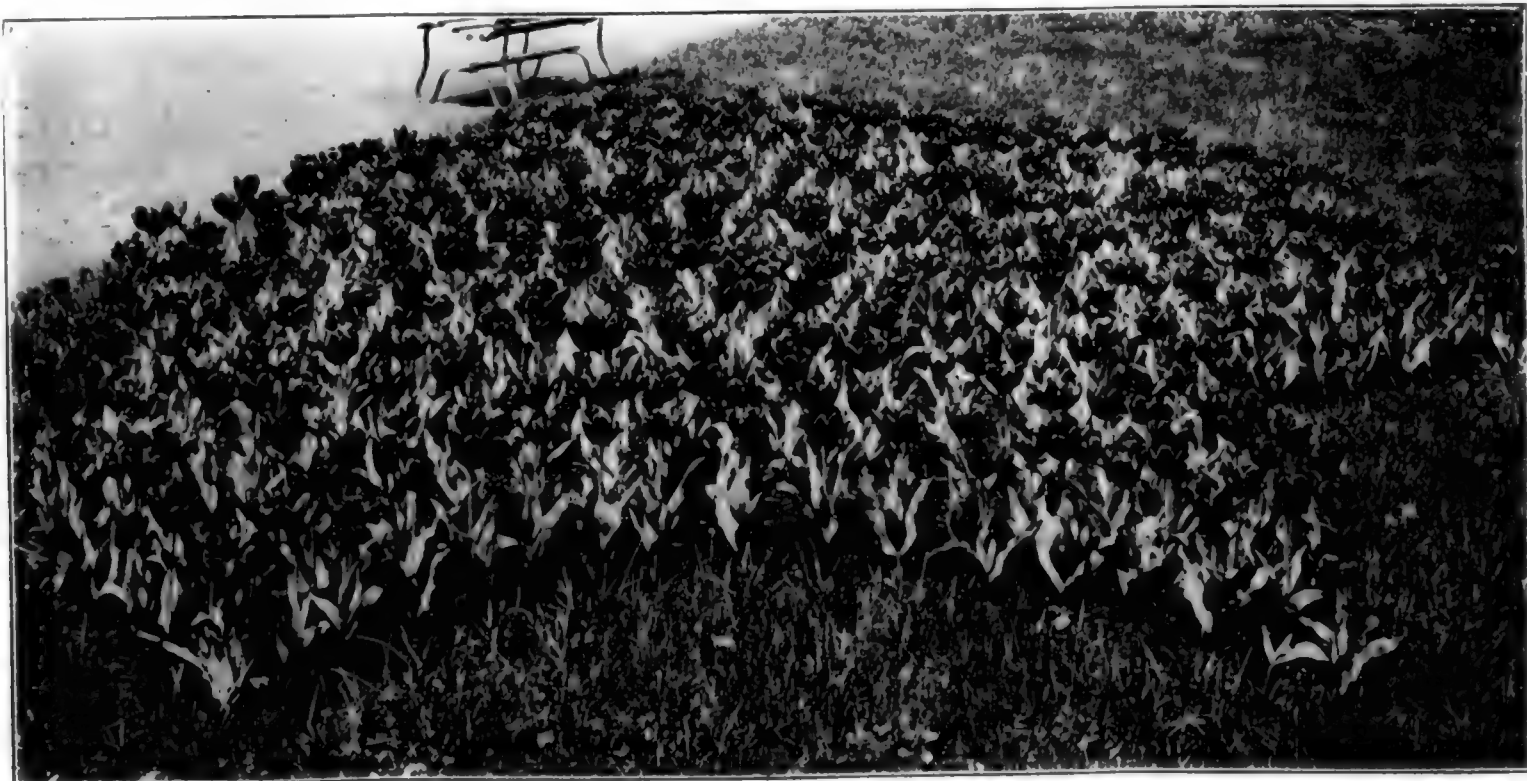

Will you please inform me if the Peachblow hibiscus is hardy enough to stand the winters in this climate, in southwestern Michigan?

W. B.

The hibiscus most often seen in cultivation is H. Moscheutos. This is the best of the marsh mallows and succeeds well either in any good garden soil or in quite moist locations, such as the borders of streams and ponds, in which latter situations it succeeds specially well. Probably the variety Peachblow is a form of H. Moscheutos. This and H. militaris are both perfectly hardy and need no winter protection whatsoever.

When to Feed.

The questions of when to feed the plants, how long to continue the process and when to stop feeding altogether, often prove a stumbling block to the grower of limited experience, and one cannot well, from his own experience, instruct others without seeing the plants and knowing the general conditions. Many good flowers are spoiled every year by well-meaning but too enthusiastic growers, who are determined to "have some exhibition flowers this year," and overshoot the mark in their eagerness.

Pot plants can be fed with liquid at any time that the pot is well filled with roots, and plants set out in benches will take feeding after they have been set out from eight to ten weeks. It is entirely wrong to feed any plant that is not well established, no matter where it is growing.

Assuming, then, that we have commenced feeding, how long should it be continued and how much should be used? Once I commence feeding, the plants do not have any more clear water except when, once in a while, a section of bench dries out oftener than another. By keeping the strength of the liquid well within the lines of safety—the proportions were given in these notes in the REVIEW of September 5—the feeding root hairs are not destroyed, and the plant can be seen to be improving every day by the thickening of the main stem and the increasing size and richer color of the leaves. It is better to feed liquid solutions after September 1, because what we need is immediate results and the chemist teaches us that what is water-soluble is immediately available for the use of the plant.

When to Stop Feeding.

There are several ways of seeing when the plants have had about enough feeding. When the foliage is large and of a black-green color and rustles as you brush your arm along it, the plant is getting all the feed it needs. When the foliage is so brittle that it snaps off the stalk when touched and the leaf will snap into pieces when folded up, instead of bending to the fold, your plants have had all the nitrogen they need and feeding should be stopped altogether.

Plants that have the wood well ripened, as shown by the bark appearing all up the main stem, will stand much more feeding and produce a much larger flower than later planted stock that is fleshy and gross looking, with stems still green.

Occasionally you will see buds that look as though some one had taken a knife and cut the stem halfway through immediately below the bud. This is another of nature's methods of telling you to stop feeding. The roots are pumping up more sap than the bud can assimilate, and under the pressure the weakest spot snaps first. The Duck-hams, owing to their strong root action, often show this trouble, and to a greater or less degree any variety will show it if overfed. When it appears, shut off the feed altogether and also most of the water supply, and let the plants go hungry for a time.

Red varieties should not be fed after the bud splits its covering, as they are very sensitive to damping of the petals and melt away in the sun in a heart-breaking manner. The crimson color is in some way responsible for this, because the reds shading to purple or bronze do not show this trouble, while G. W. Childs, perhaps one of the most beautiful crimsons ever sent out, used to be sometimes a total loss and several of our present-day crimsons are not much better.

It is best to stop feeding on any variety when the petals are advanced far enough to show the color well, because unless one is well versed, it is easy to spoil everything after this time and one should not take too many chances.

WORMS IN MUM BENCHES.

I send under separate cover some soil from a bench of mums. There are numerous spots on the bench where the soil is "alive," like the sample sent. Can you tell whether these worms are injurious and what to do in order to exterminate them?

F. A. W.

The worms were dead and so shriveled when received that we could not identify them. They appear to be a small edition of a very bad pest in the east, viz., the larvæ of the May beetle, which devour the roots of many plants. Probably many of these pests will come to the surface and could be poisoned, but the most effectual remedy will be to procure some bisulphide of carbon at a drug store. Make holes with a sharp-pointed stick, eighteen to twenty-four inches apart each way. Pour a few drops of the carbon in each hole, immediately covering it with soil. Be sure not to strike any matches while using the liquid, as the powerful fumes are explosive, and moisten the soil in the benches well before applying it, if they are at all dry.

C. W.

THRIPS ON VIOLETS.

We have an abundance of thrips in our violet soil and some in our rose and carnation soil. We spray with tobacco extract on roses and carnations, but as to violets, we are doubtful whether they will stand spraying with this, so we sprinkle tobacco dust, but cannot get rid of the pest. We use compost from the cow lot, and bone meal.

J. L. O.

For thrips on roses and carnations I know of nothing better than the tobacco extracts, but they must not be used on violets, as they will burn the foliage. Tobacco dust, or the fumes from tobacco powder or the extracts, ought to destroy the aphids and thrips without injuring the plants. Thrips are hard to get rid of during warm weather, but as it gets cooler you will have less trouble in keeping them in check.

NARCISSI IN VIRGINIA.

The illustration on page 9 shows a field of Narcissus Barri conspicuus, or Virginian Beauty, in the grounds of the Hubert Bulb Co., at Portsmouth, Va. This firm claims to be not only the largest grower of bulbs in the south, but also the pioneer in that rapidly growing and already important industry in that part of the south. The figure in the extreme left of the picture is F. J. Hubert, the managing director of the firm.

It was only after years of careful watching and experimenting that the Hubert Bulb Co. selected its present location, having learned from these investigations that the soil and climate of the Tidewater region were particularly favorable to the growth of narcissi, tulips, gladioli, iris, peonies, etc. Starting four years ago with five acres, last season the firm had thirty-five acres planted with these bulbs, which presented a fine, healthy appearance. This season an additional fifteen acres will be planted. The firm asserts that one great point in favor of Virginia-grown bulbs is the fact that, given the same treatment as Dutch bulbs, the Virginian bulbs will flower at least ten days earlier, thus saving time and fuel and finding a better market.

PUNCTURES BY INSECTS.

Inclosed are a few leaves from Lawson and White Enchantress carnations which are now housed and have become thus affected since taken from the field. They were in perfect health when in the open. Kindly inform me as to the cause and remedy of the disease. E. L. B.

The leaves sent show unmistakable signs of a bad case of red spider, and also a few light spots caused by stigmomose. The latter may be caused by the former, but most likely it was caused by aphids, possibly previous to the present season.

The spider you can get rid of at once by spraying the plants every bright day for a short period with a sharp spray from the hose, from both sides of the bed if possible. Be careful, however, that you do not get the soil too wet, and also be sure the plants dry off well before night. The days are getting shorter and the sun weaker; hence evaporation is less rapid and there is more danger of leaf-spot and kindred diseases, usually brought on by too much moisture and stagnation.

The stigmomose is not so easy to get rid of, but can be worked out of the stock by careful selection of cuttings and sane culture. When taking cuttings for next season's stock, take them from plants that show none of these spots. Root them cool and when rooted pot into new soil which is not too rich and set in a cool house of about 48 to 50 degrees. Shift as may be needed and see to it that they do not get a check from any cause, such as too much or too little water, too rich soil, or from starvation. The following season there will likely be less of the disease, though it will hardly disappear altogether that soon. It will likely require the same careful selection for from three to five years to rid your stock of it entirely.

In view of the rapid superseding of one variety by a better one these days, one would be inclined to doubt the wisdom of spending so much labor on rejuvenating a run-down variety, and in many cases it would be economy to discard it and stock up with a new variety in good health. But when there is not a variety to be had to immediately take its place it will pay well for the trouble. If you are obliged to grow a variety you should bend every effort to have it as strong and robust as possible while you are growing it.

Your this year's plants will show these spots to some extent in spite of anything you may do. Moderate culture will, however, minimize it to some extent. Any undue forcing or feeding will aggravate it and should be carefully avoided. As this disease is started by the punctures of insects, great care should be taken to keep them off the young plants especially.

A. F. J. BAUR.

CLUB-ROOT ON CARNATIONS.

We have a very bad attack of club-root on our carnations. Some clubs have grown to the size of the end of your finger. We have seen signs of it for some three years, but this is the worst of all. We have never used the same soil for two successive years and have never planted our carnations in the field where they were grown before. We use a liberal quantity of air-slaked lime, both on field and in compost heap. We housed our carnations, six houses in all, and finished planting by August 10. Now, what we want to know is how to get rid of the disease. Is it inheritable through propagations of cuttings? What can we do with our stock, to expect a good cut of flowers? We have applied a heavy sprinkle of lime over the benches. The carnations are growing very nicely, but we have noticed that plants having this disease never make many flowers.

J. L. O.

I regret that I cannot give you any advice on your query about club-root on carnations. I have never come across such a thing. I should like to see a plant thus affected. I have often seen individual plants which produced only grass and no flower stems. Such plants are termed "wild." No cuttings should ever be taken from them, as they will invariably grow into similar plants. I have been told that by cutting such plants back hard they can be induced to throw flower stems. While I do not know the cause of plants behaving in that way, I have never attributed it to any such thing as club-root. You ought to be able to tell whether it is inheritable, by observing the new varieties you buy each season. If this trouble remains only among the older varieties, of which you propagated your own stock, then such may be the case. But, on the other hand, if the newer importations are affected, also, then it is likely in the soil

The dome of the boiler, weighing hundreds of pounds, was blown northward at least 600 feet and lit in an open space, thus clearing the entire expanse of the greenhouses, comprising 400,000 feet of glass. Another piece, weighing 300 pounds, crashed through the roof of the stable, but did not hit any of the stock. At the boiler-room the 90-foot smokestack stands apparently intact. Two boilers remain in position, but one is bent inward and apparently ruined, while the other one is seriously damaged. The other two boilers were also lifted clear of the wreck by the blast. The exploding boiler is completely gone, ripped into shreds.

The wrecked battery served the rose porary use and are now doing duty. The greatest difficulty was in securing lumber to do anything more than a temporary job of repairing.

Mr. Kellogg takes his loss philosophically and on the following Saturday, September 28, wrote: "Trusting in the Lord, I am still hard at work and hope that cold weather will hold off for another week, after which I think I will be fairly well closed in."

GROWING OF CUT FLOWERS.

[A paper by F. R. Pierson, of Tarrytown, N. Y., read before the Congress of Horticulture at the Jamestown exposition, September 23, 1907.]

The development in the commercial growing of cut flowers in this country during the last thirty years has been phenomenal. What might be dignified as the commercial growing of cut flowers practically had its beginning less than thirty years ago. Prior to that time the quantity of flowers produced was insignificant, the quality, compared with present standards, inferior, and the methods of culture crude in the extreme. With the increase of wealth, there has been a marvelous progress in the production of cut flowers, both in the quality and the immense quantities produced.

It seems incredible now that the writer, less than thirty years ago, was advised by one of the foremost florists of that time not to go into the cut flower growing part of the business, because it would soon be overdone. This seems the more incredible when one considers that today many single establishments are producing more cut flowers than the entire greenhouse production of the United States probably amounted to at that time.

Thirty Years Ago.

New York, which is one of the greatest cut flower centers in the world, thirty years ago depended on Boston for its supply of roses. The leading varieties of roses in those days were Safrano, Isabella Sprunt and Bon Silene, all of which have practically disappeared, having been superseded by improved sorts, and today these one-time popular roses are almost unknown. In carnations at that time the leading variety was President De Graw. A long-stemmed carnation was then unthought of, as many buds being allowed to develop on one stem as possible, and the flowers were cut with no stems. Loose, long-stemmed

KELLOGG'S PLANT WRECKED.

Boiler Explosion at Pleasant Hill.

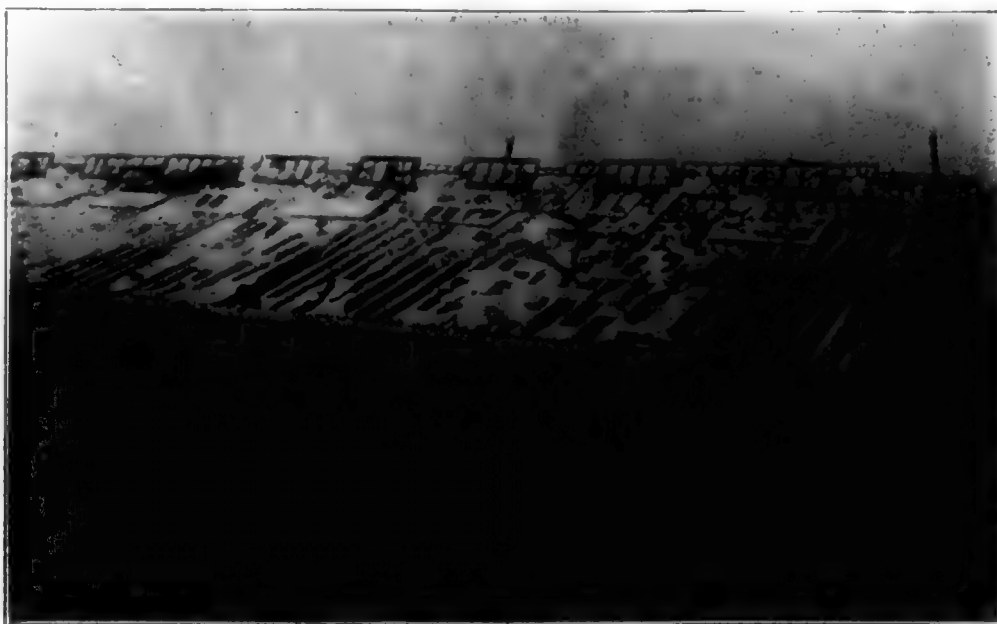

At 6 a. m. Thursday, September 26, a boiler exploded at the establishment of George M. Kellogg, Pleasant Hill, Mo., wholly demolishing the boiler-shed and breaking about 50,000 square feet of glass, besides wrecking the framework of some of the houses. There was no loss of life, as the fireman had left the shed and the men had not yet reported for work. After two days Mr. Kellogg said that at the lowest estimate the damage to the plant would be $35,000, to say nothing of the loss of stock in the houses.

The boiler that exploded was 80-inch, tubular, with a capacity of twenty pounds of steam. It was fired the day before for the first time this fall and was kept going all night. A second boiler was also under steam, but the other three in the battery were unused. The fireman, who had left the room, insisted that his steam was gauging well within the limit, but the fact that the boiler, of quarter-inch steel, was ripped as if it were so much cloth, indicates a tremendous pressure, and Mr. Kellogg reports that it was afterwards proven the gauge was shut off the boiler and the valve letting the steam into the houses was closed tight. Houses reeled and rocked with the explosion, which came with a snappish roar, and many people in the town ran out, thinking that an earthquake was at hand.

and carnation division of the institution, and the force of the explosion lifted the ends of the houses clear off the ground, the concussion breaking every pane of glass. The rain of iron and stone which fell upon the range broke glass all over the place and here and there heavy objects did damage to roof and benches as well.

Rebuilding Not Delayed.

The same morning Mr. Kellogg went to Kansas City, estimating that he required over 1,000 boxes of glass to reglaze his houses, and the next day the first car reached Pleasant Hill. Two small boilers were procured for tem-flowers were then an unknown quantity. These short-stemmed flowers were supplemented by wooden stems and wires, and made up into baskets, bouquets, etc., in the most formal and artificial arrangement; in fact, the inferior quality of the flowers permitted nothing better. The best flowers then produced would simply be unsalable today, on account of their small size and short stems. At that time so few roses and carnations were grown that they were necessarily supplemented by French and Dutch bulbs, which in those days were forced in comparatively large quantities.

In the earlier days of the cut flower industry, European methods of culture were in vogue. The few roses and carnations that were grown were mostly in pots, the greenhouses of those days being very primitive. Up to that time, the buildings erected for the production of cut flowers were very small and insignificant and comparatively crude affairs. With the introduction of some of the finer roses, like Perle, Cornelia Cook, Catherine Mermet, Bride, and Bridesmaid, a great impetus was given the cut flower industry, and then came the queen of all roses, American Beauty.

Beginning of Present Methods.

I believe that the present up-to-date methods of rose growing had their beginning in the vicinity of Madison, N. J. The old pot method was discarded, and roses were grown on shallow benches in light, sunny, airy houses, and the results obtained were exceedingly satisfactory and profitable. Large ranges of rose houses were constantly erected in that section, along the line of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western railroad, and at that time Madison, Summit, and other towns in that vicinity were known as the rose belt of America; but since then immense ranges of glass for the cultivation of roses have been erected in so many different localities around New York, Chicago, Boston, and other large cities that no one place in the country can boast of any particular supremacy.

The same development that occurred in the rose took place in the carnation, but at a considerably later period, and the present fine varieties of carnations that are now grown have all been produced within the last decade. First came Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson, which marked an epoch in carnation growing. This variety was the forerunner of such fine varieties as Enchantress, Mrs. M. A. Patten, Beacon, White Perfection, Winsor, etc. The trade was quick to discern that while these improved carnations could be grown in the old-time houses, they could be grown much better in the improved houses that were devoted to rose culture.

Progress in Violet Growing.

Another flower which has become one of the most important is the violet. In the earlier days violets were grown in coldframes, covered with sashes and straw mats; and, of course, with our severe winters, the supply was small and uncertain. The same improved methods of culture that have taken place with the rose and carnation followed with the violet; and today violets are grown in large quantities in light, airy houses, entirely under glass—a method of culture that fifteen or twenty years ago was unheard of and unthought of. The violet business has been largely centralized for many years in the Hudson river valley, especially in the vicinity of Poughkeepsie and Rhinebeck, which has become famous as a violet-growing section, where the variety called Marie Louise is principally grown. Princess of Wales, the large single violet, which is not so difficult to grow, has been grown in other sections where Marie Louise has not been grown successfully or profitably. Immense quantities of Princess are grown, especially in the vicinity of Boston, and also in some of the large Canadian centers.

One of the most phenomenal improvements that have been made in any flower has been in the chrysanthemum, which has been developed to such an extent that one who knew it twenty-five or thirty years ago would not recognize the immense blooms grown today.

The Bermuda Easter Lily.

Another very important flower for the florist is the Easter lily, which was grown only in very small quantities until the introduction of the Bermuda Easter lily twenty-five years ago. Prior to that time, lily bulbs were obtainable only from Japan and Holland, and the sources of supply were very uncertain, besides which, the bulbs often reached this market too late to force for Easter. Under these circumstances, the advantages of the Bermuda Easter lily were immediately recognized, as the bulbs could be brought here in July and August, so that it was possible not only to force them for Easter, but they could even be brought into flower by the holidays, so that the Bermuda Easter lily has become one of the most important flowers, especially for the Easter season, and is now grown in immense quantities.

I introduced the commercial culture of the Bermuda Easter lily in Bermuda about twenty-five years ago, and I believe that for many years one-third of the revenue of the Bermuda Islands was derived from the culture and sale of this bulb. It has been grown there in immense quantities; the normal output for many years has been two million bulbs and up, and one year it reached as high as four million. Unfortunately, with bad cultural methods, the quality of the bulb has deteriorated; still, the Bermuda-grown lily is an important factor. But the Japanese bulbs have made great inroads into the demand for the Bermuda bulbs, on account of the lower price for which the former can be supplied, and the fact that, by reason of more rapid steamers and transcontinental railroads, it is possible to bring the bulbs here as early as September; so that the Bermuda lily does not occupy the important position today that it did fifteen years ago.

The Lily of the Valley.

Among other bulbous flowers, the lily of the valley is one that has held its supremacy. This always has been, and probably always will be, in great demand, while other bulbous stock, like tulips, narcissi, and especially hyacinths, do not occupy the prominent place today that they did in former years. In the larger cities, especially in the east, they are not very profitable. They are more largely grown in the west and in interior towns, where the supply of roses, carnations and the other finer flowers is more or less limited. Bulbous stock is more largely grown in Europe than in this country, because, owing to the lack of sunlight there, roses and carnations cannot be produced so easily as they are here, so that the Europeans are more dependent on bulbous stock. Recently, however, English growers have found that by following the American method of using shallow benches and building very light houses, very good results can be obtained. This is especially so with carnations, English growers having learned that they can do much better with our improved American varieties than with the varieties that they have grown heretofore; and there is beginning to be a large demand for our newest and best sorts.

LAUREL IN CAR LOTS.

How many pounds or tons of mountain laurel, loose, for festooning, will an average railway car hold? H. L. L.

Laurel is not commonly shipped in car lots, but we think a car would hold from 350 to 400 sacks, and as there are fifty pounds in each sack the total weight of a carload would thus be from 17,500 to 20,000 pounds.

SEASONABLE REMINDERS.

Watchfulness Essential Now.

With the changeable conditions which we may now expect, greater watchfulness and care are required. Especially is this so when we commence firing. The transition from natural to artificial heat requires a keen and prompt adaptation to the altered conditions, which cannot be neglected without incurring great risks. In natural heat the drying out or evaporation largely takes place from the surface downwards, but just as soon as we apply the artificial heat evaporation takes place at those points nearest our radiators. These in many cases are yet placed under the benches and where this is the case the greatest care is necessary to prevent the roots from becoming dry. A careful daily examination of the condition of the soil should be one of the first duties of the grower.

With the longer nights and lessened sunshine, and also the natural inclination of stock to take a rest, great care must be used in watering and ventilation. The natural tendency of all plants to go to rest at this season gives a deal of trouble to the grower to get them past this stage. Any sudden check, such as an abrupt lowering of temperature, withholding of water, or even the reverse, giving too much, will certainly encourage this tendency.

Ventilation and Mulching.

The importance of proper ventilation at this season cannot be overestimated, as the health of the stock entirely depends on the way it is carried from summer to winter conditions. Shutting down the ventilators to save a load or so of coal results in an accumulation of moisture in the house which will show in the morning in the form of small globules of water on the leaves. If this is permitted to occur frequently it will so affect the leaves that they will become so soft as to be susceptible to the first trouble that strikes them, and these troubles are many and frequent.

By firing when there is danger of the temperature falling below 55 degrees outside, and keeping the ventilators open, many of these troubles can in a great measure be avoided.

Mulching, to be of any use in helping the early winter or holiday crops, should be applied soon. While speaking of mulching, I have found it profitable to give the surface of the soil a light sprinkling of wood ashes before applying the much at this season. This helps to stiffen the stem and will most certainly give better color to the petals.

If the soil is deficient in calcareous matter, and most of our soils are, a generous sprinkling of air-slaked lime will also greatly benefit the plants during the dark weather.

It should be remembered not to use bone and lime in combination, as this will release more ammonia than the plants can use, so it is not safe to use bone on limed benches for at least a week, or until the gases from the lime have been dissipated.

RIBES.

HARDY GARDEN ROSES.

Will you please tell me the names of the best pink and red hardy garden roses, to grow here in Rhode Island?

W. B.

To name the best varieties of roses for any locality is rather a hard task, so many attending conditions, such as climate, quality of soil, etc., having to be taken into consideration. This querist also failed to state what class of roses he intended to grow.

In ramblers there are no safer varieties than Crimson Rambler for red and Dorothy Perkins for pink. In hybrid perpetual roses, General Jacqueminot is a good red and Captain Christy a good pink. In teas, hybrid teas and hybrid China roses, the best for outdoor purposes are Bridesmaid, pink; Gruss an Teplitz, red. Helen Gould is also a good red in some localities.

There are many varieties which, owing to local conditions, may do as well or even better than these. It is only after years of experimenting that one can reach the best results.

RIBES.

LIQUID MANURE.

How much chicken manure should we use to the barrel of water for liquid manure to be used on roses and carnations, and how much cow manure should we use for the same purpose? Should we use fresh cow manure or should we use manure that has lain in a pile for some time, and why?

G. B.

The quantity of chicken manure required to a barrel of water is one-half peck, and this should be allowed to stand until fermentation has commenced. For a first application it should be even weaker than this. For cow manure one-half bushel to a barrel of water is sufficient and, as before mentioned, first applications should always be a little weaker, until the plants become accustomed to this class of food.

The quality of the manure has also a good deal to do with the experiment, as the droppings from young stock possess only about one-half the nutriment contained in that from mature stock, and that procured from cattle fed on hay, grain and straw is much superior to that from grass-fed or brewery-fed stock.

Fresh cow manure is always preferable when used for liquid feeding, but the "why" would occupy more space in these columns than could be allowed. Expert growers, after long experience and with all scientific aids, have found this the most perfect of manures for the purpose, and from a commercial point of view it is safer to follow in their footsteps than to branch off into unknown paths.

RIBES.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Edgar Sanders.

Edgar Sanders, the dean of the Chicago florists, passed away early on the morning of Sunday, September 29, after an illness covering five years but which had confined him to the house only during the last few months. He was widely known in the trade and esteemed as it was given to but few men to be held in the regard of their associates.

The funeral was held at 2 p. m. Wednesday, October 2, from the home of Mrs. H. P. Victor, 1639 Belmont avenue, with whom Mr. Sanders had made his the chapter chose as pall-bearers florists which Mr. Sanders was treasurer, attended in a body. The services were conducted by Lincoln Park Chapter, of which Mr. Sanders was a member, but the Chapter chose as pall-bearers florists who also are members of the Masonic order, as follows: Andrew McAdams, Sam Pearce, Anton Then, George Asmus, John T. Muir and H. N. Bruns. Among the twelve honorary pall-bearers were four of the oldest florists, George Wittbold, J. C. Vaughan, F. F. Benthley and E. Wienhoeber. The funeral was one of the largest seen on the north side in many a day, for Mr. Sanders was as widely known in other walks of life, and as highly esteemed, as he was in the trade. Interment was at Graceland.

Edgar Sanders was born near East Grinstead, in the northern part of Sussex county, England, October 10, 1827. His father was gardener on a neighboring estate, known as Felbridge Park. Later his father became gardener at Tilgate House, near the town of Crawley, where Edgar attended school until he was 12 years old. At that age, being the eldest of a family which eventually contained fourteen children, Edgar found it necessary to begin earning his own living.

His first regular work was in a nursery, where he remained till 1841. Then he obtained a position as under gardener on a private estate at Lower Tilgate, and attended to business so diligently that he soon became foreman of the establishment. In 1845, when he was 18 years of age, he went to London. After some experience as a journeyman gardener there, he held the position of head gardener in two private places near Egham, Surrey.

In 1853 Mr. Sanders decided to come to America, and landed at New York April 29 of that year. He immediately proceeded to Albany, where his first labor was performed in James Wilson's nursery. Subsequently he obtained a month's work laying out the grounds of Luther Tucker, who was the original publisher of Downing's Horticulturist, but at the time mentioned had started the Country Gentleman. For this paper

Mr. Sanders began to write at once, and was on its staff for a period of six years. After completing the work for Mr. Tucker, Mr. Sanders became gardener for General John F. Rathbone, of Albany, a gentleman who afterward became famous for his collection of orchids. A few years after Mr. Sanders left, the late William Gray, of Albany, filled this position at Rathbone's.

After remaining with General Rathbone for nearly four years, Mr. Sanders decided to try his fortune in the west. He removed to Chicago, therefore, in the spring of 1857, bought some land in Lake View and built a cottage with a 50-foot greenhouse at the south side of it. Lake View was then but a small town with a few hundred inhabitants, and Chicago's entire population was less than 100,000. There were no sidewalks north of North avenue, and the old plank road, now Evanston avenue, was the fashionable drive leading to the equally fashionable Lake View House, on the lake shore. It was on this plank road that Mr. Sanders' greenhouses were located.

When Mr. Sanders made this start as a Chicago florist there were three other florists in the city, each with about the same extent of glass as his own and all growing a general stock, including vegetables as well as flowers. In a few years Mr. Sanders had erected several greenhouses and was becoming noted as a shipper. In March, 1867, he opened the first flower store in Chicago, at 56 Clark street, under the Sherman House. The great fire of 1871 checked his progress for some time, although he was fortunate in having only the store burned out. He remained away from the retail trade for three years; then he entered this branch again, continuing in it till about 1882, when he retired from active connection with the florists' trade both as a grower and a seller.

Mr. Sanders has been nearly all his life a contributor to the horticultural papers. He made his first venture in that line at the age of 19, when he began writing for the London Gardeners' Chronicle. He also was a correspondent from England to the American Gardeners' Chronicle, then published in New York. As already stated, when he left England and came to Albany he at once began his six years' connection with the paper called the Country Gentleman. On arriving in Chicago, he became attached to the staff of the Prairie Farmer, published in that city, and continued in that position until about 1890. He also conducted for a short time a horticultural department of a daily in Chicago, and for some years had charge of the department of Garden and Lawn in the Orange Judd Farmer. About 1893 he became the Chicago correspondent of the Florists' Exchange, and he continued to act in that capacity until July, 1902, when he was prostrated by an illness from which he never fully recovered.

Aside from his work as a writer, Mr. Sanders has always taken an active interest in all horticultural matters. At the age of 19 he belonged to a gardeners' society in England, and on coming to America he participated without loss of time in the organization of a horticultural club in Albany. When he arrived in Chicago he aided in the organization of the Cook County Agricultural and Horticultural Society in 1857, and also in the organization of the Chicago Gardeners' Club the following year. At the organization of the American Association of Nurserymen in 1876 Mr. Sanders acted as temporary president, and he was elected president again in 1884. He was at one time president of the Chicago Florists' Club, and for many years has been its treasurer. He has also been a member of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society of Chicago and has taken a deep interest in the success of the annual exhibitions. His last appearance among his many warm friends in the trade was during a visit to the 1906 show at the Coliseum.

Edgar Sanders.

Mr. Sanders has also during his busy life taken an active part in political work. From 1869 to 1873 he was commissioner of highways of the town of Lake View, and he was supervisor and treasurer of the same town from 1879 to 1883. He has also acted as deputy sheriff and as deputy assessor. He was appointed commissioner of public works of Lake View when it was organized as a city, and he retained that position during most of Lake View's existence as a separate city.

Mr. Sanders was married before leaving England. His wife died in 1874. He has five daughters, all of whom are married, and he also has quite a number of grandchildren.

Charles Schleeter.

Charles Schleeter, a florist who lived on the Newburg road, two miles and a half from Louisville, Ky., dropped dead in a barber shop in that city, Saturday evening, September 21. In response to the barber's call of "Next," Mr. Schleeter was stepping across the floor to the barber chair, when he fell and was dead in a few seconds.

Henry A. Jones.

Henry A. Jones, a traveling representative of Ralph M. Ward & Co., New York, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Florence J. Barton, Cromwell, Conn., August 23. His illness was of short duration. Being attacked with acute indigestion while on the road, he hurried home, but died in four days.

Mr. Jones was a man of many sterling qualities, genial and very companionable, and made a great many friends during his travels. He was born in Baltimore, Md., February 29, 1840. His parents died when he was quite young, leaving him to shift for himself. Most of his education was obtained by studying after working hours in the evening. During the war and for several years afterward he was chief clerk in the quartermaster general's department at Washington, and also held other responsible government positions. After leaving the government's employ he was for many years a wholesale dealer in builders' supplies at Washington. He married Frances Katherine Howser, of Baltimore, who died in 1881. He leaves four daughters and one son.

C. P. Barry.

Word comes from Rochester, N. Y., of the demise of Charles Patrick Barry, vice-president of the Ellwanger & Barry Nursery Co. and the Ellwanger & Barry Realty Co. He was born in Rochester, fifty-five years ago. He leaves a widow, two sons and a daughter. His brother, William C. Barry, is the present head of the business founded by the late George Ellwanger and the late Patrick Barry.

THE WEEKLY

is printed Wednesday evening and mailed early Thursday morning. It is earnestly requested that all advertisers and correspondents mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday, or Tuesday at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

INCORPORATED BY ACT OF CONGRESS MARCH 4, '01.

Officers for 1907: President, William J. Stewart, Boston; vice-president, John Westcott, Philadelphia; secretary, P. J. Hauswirth, 232 Michigan avenue, Chicago; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary, P. J. Hauswirth, 232 Michigan avenue, Chicago; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

CARBOLIC ointment will relieve primula poisoning; but be careful not to break the pustules.

A LETTER that is not worth signing with one's full name and address is not worth mailing.

IF "A Long Subscriber," at Morristown, N. J., will send his full name and address it will be a pleasure for the REVIEW to answer his inquiry.

GEORGE DICKSON, of the firm of Alexander Dickson & Sons, Newtownards, Ireland, raisers of the Liberty, Killarney and many other well-known roses, has been a Victoria Medalist of Honor.

WILLIAM SCOTT advocates the late planting of tulips outside for spring flowering; he says that bulbs planted as late as the end of November will remain longer in flower than those planted the middle of October.

THE flower business is a rapid-fire affair; celerity is an essential in the execution of practically every order. But that is no reason why a florist should fail to place his own orders for supplies as much in advance as possible.

No, it isn't true that every florist who amounts to anything has a printed letter-head. There are hundreds of growers and others who are making a good living at the trade who still send out their orders and other communications on plain paper, unbusiness-like as that may seem.

ALL lilies are better for fall planting, but many varieties of Japanese lilies do not arrive from Japan before the ground freezes up. There is one method, however, by which they can be planted late in November or in December, says J. Wilkinson Elliott, and that is to cover the ground in which they are to be planted before it freezes with eight to twelve inches of stable manure. This will prevent the ground from freezing, and the manure can be removed and the lilies planted upon their arrival.

AND now New Orleans proposes to have a world's fair, the Panama Bi-oceanic Exposition, in 1915.

SEND out a neatly printed announcement to your bedding plant customers, calling their attention to the Dutch bulbs, and you will pick up many new orders for planting beds this fall.

THE McKinley memorial was dedicated at Canton, O., September 30, and coincident with it H. M. Altick sent out a statement of the florists' contribution to the fund. He showed that $1,051.64, given by 231 contributors, has been turned over to the memorial association.

POSTAGE ON FOREIGN LETTERS.

According to the provisions of the last Universal Postal Convention, signed in Rome, the maximum weight of a letter that can be sent to a foreign country for 5 cents is now double what it formerly was. In other words, the rate of postage charged in the United States on letters mailed to foreign countries, instead of 5 cents for each half ounce, as formerly, is now 5 cents for the first ounce, and 3 cents for each additional ounce or fraction of an ounce. This reduction took effect October 1, 1907. The rates on other classes of foreign mail matter remain unchanged.

IT ISN'T RIGHT, IS IT?

A short time ago a small advertisement, which we inserted in the REVIEW for two issues, brought us nearly $200 clear money. We received orders from several different states. But, among all those who ordered, not one said he had seen our advertisement in the REVIEW. They simply stated what they desired and remitted the cash for it. Now, if we had put our advertisement in any other florists' paper—which we had intended to do, but neglected it in some way or other—we should never have known where the customers saw our advertisement, but as we advertised only in the REVIEW, we knew surely that it was the REVIEW that brought us the orders.

Now, do you think this is right? We certainly do not. It is not fair either to the publisher or to the advertiser. The advertiser, if he has advertisements in several papers, does not know which paper he is getting his orders from, or which is the best paper for him to advertise in. Neither does the paper receive the credit due it, if not mentioned in the order. And again, the person who receives an order is sometimes puzzled in his attempt to decide whether the items in the order were selected from an advertisement in a trade paper or from his catalogue, whereas, if this information were given in the order, it might save much time and trouble and would be better in every way.

This is a true account of our experience, and we should be more than pleased to hear what the publishers have to say about the matter. We believe in giving praise to whom praise is due, and we try to do it. ALONZO J. BRYAN.

[The publishers of the REVIEW devote considerable space to carrying the line under each advertisement, "Mention the REVIEW when you write." Most readers heed it, we believe, and Mr. Bryan's experience in this respect is quite exceptional, for prompt and satisfactory response, mentioning the paper, is the rule whenever seasonable stock is offered.]

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market has had another of its violent fluctuations since last report and now is well on its way back to the conditions which prevailed a week ago.

It rained almost incessantly for four days in the latter part of last week, and the outdoor flowers are practically over. A few asters still are seen, but they are so poor that few of them are acceptable to the retailers. The long period of sunless weather also had the effect of reducing cuts under glass, with the result that at the end of last week there was a material reduction of all lines of supply in the market and a corresponding increase in demand. Monday found the market shorter than it has been in several months and the demand, by comparison to the supply, was something enormous.

It invariably happens that when supplies are sharply reduced in the Chicago market, they also are reduced everywhere else in the middle west. The result is that those who have their own, or local, supplies in times of normal production, are forced to call on Chicago and the demand upon this market is multiplied several times. If the buyer stops to consider the result he will not be surprised at some of the things which happen. Take into account Monday's condition: supplies not more than half what they were a week before; demand three times what it was a week ago. By rights prices should be multiplied by six.

It was, of course, impossible to fill all orders. Such a scurrying for stock must inevitably result in a sharp advance in prices, but the advance always is limited by the figures which the local buyers can afford to pay for stock. Out-of-town buyers may not appreciate the fact, but it is nevertheless true that on Monday local buyers paid as high as 5 cents for carnations, of course in limited quantity and when they were urgently needed; but the out-of-town buyers got off cheaper. Shippers always favor the regular out-of-town customer in times of sudden scarcity, although they do not always get credit for it. The advance on roses was not as sharp as on carnations, for the demand was not so great and the supply was larger. Bride may be an exception. There was an especially heavy call for Beauties and local buyers paid as high as $5 per dozen for select long stock. Chrysanthemums were about the only item in increased supply.

This week has brought a return of bright skies and, under the influence of the genial sun, cuts are again increasing. If the weather continues good the latter part of this week will see supplies normal for the season and prices where they ordinarily are. It is predicted, however, that carnations will bring higher prices through October this year than they did last year. This, of course, is somewhat dependent upon the demand, but it seems assured that the demand will be strong and the carnation growers nearly all say that, while their plants are strong and healthy, they are much smaller than they were at this date last year and the crop may be said to be at least three or four weeks late.

There are abundant supplies of all greens, although the demand is excellent, store openings being numerous.

Rhinebeck Violets.

A. L. Vaughan, of Vaughan & Sperry, returned September 28 from a week's stay at Rhinebeck, N. Y., during which he visited a large number of violet growers in Rhinebeck and adjoining towns. Mr. Vaughan reports that there has been a large increase in glass devoted to violets there this season. Not only have many of the older growers added to their glass, but at least a dozen new places have been started. He says the stock looks better than he ever remembers to have seen it at this date. He anticipates not only a large production but also excellent quality this season. Mr. Vaughan met J. K. Allen, A. J. Guttman and other New York wholesalers in the violet country and says that the development of the western markets is being watched closely, not only by the growers but by the wholesalers.

Mrs. Field.

The farther Peter Reinberg goes with the Mrs. Marshall Field rose the more he thinks of it. It is well known that the productiveness of this variety was the means of largely increasing his business during the summer months and Leonard Kill shows sales-tickets for Mrs. Field at 20 cents each within the present week. Of course no great proportion bring this figure, but several hundreds are cut each day which bring from 10 to 15 cents.

Interest in Asters.

E. C. Amling says that he has received strong evidence of the interest taken by aster growers in procuring the newest and best varieties. Since he advertised the new Crego aster in the Re-

WIETOR BROS.

51 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO

Mention The Review when you write.

VIEW, during the period he was marketing the cut blooms, he has received a number of requests that he procure from the grower, as soon as ready, seeds for his correspondents, several of whom mention their indifference as to what the price may be.

Auxiliary Telephones.

There now are two telephone lines connecting with the city store of the Poehlmann Bros. Co. The old phone number has been dropped and the incoming call now is Randolph 35, the peculiar feature being that this also is the street number. The auxiliary line is Randolph 36.

An interesting feature of the telephone service, which not all users understand, is that where a subscriber has two lines with consecutive numbers, the two plugs in the switchboard are circled, so that the operator knows the two wires lead to the same house and if the number called for is busy the other one can be given without delay, unless that also is occupied.

It was to get two numbers together that the Poehlmann Bros. Co. gave up its old number. The same method of operating is practiced wherever any subscriber has two or more consecutive numbers.

The Weather in September.

September was cold, the mean temperature being 65 degrees, or 5 degrees below last year. The rainfall was 4.49 inches, or 1.41 inches more than normal. We are now 3.17 inches ahead for the year. The wind was strong, from the southwest: total movement, 9,416 miles

There were seven clear days, eleven partly cloudy, and twelve cloudy.

Various Notes.

George Reinberg is cutting quite a few orchids, in the two houses now devoted to that specialty. He has fine cattleyas and Dendrobium Phalenopsis.

L. Coatsworth, president of the Bentley-Coatsworth Co., says they will divide an acre of their property at New Castle and sell it as building lots, putting the money into the purchase of other land near New Castle. Their investment at New Castle turns out to have been a profitable deal, not only from a floricultural standpoint but from a real estate point of view, as the town has grown rapidly in their direction and values have greatly advanced.

Word comes from Aurora that W. C. Van Burgen and C. H. Stahl, of Chicago, who were negotiating for a site for a large greenhouse plant north of Aurora, have abandoned their idea.

Frank Oechslein, who has concentrated his growing of pot plants at the range at 2572 West Adams street, made a record in the matter of erecting his seven new houses, each one 120 feet long. They were begun August 10 and completed September 23. Among his many items of stock are some especially good chrysanthemum pot plants.

C. M. Dickinson, treasurer and manager of the E. H. Hunt corporation, returned September 28, with his family, from a month's stay at Benton Harbor, where he took a course of baths for rheumatism. He was greatly benefited.

L. Baumann & Co. supplied a large part of the artificial flower and foliage work for the decoration which is on at Field's this week. Their establishment has been working night and day for weeks preparing the large quantity of material needed and Mr. Baumann personally superintended its delivery and putting up. He was on duty constantly from Friday night until Monday morning. Although the George Wittbold Co. put in an immense quantity of outdoor stock and thousands of palms and ferns, it made comparatively little showing in the mammoth store. The cut flowers also failed to create any effect as of lavish use, the store is so great. Wittbolds have several other decorations on this week.

Peter Reinberg is crowded in the city store and the need of more room is felt to the extent that inquiries have been made as to the terms of a lease on a larger space. This has given rise to various rumors as to his intentions, all of which are said to be news to those who have charge of the selling end of the business.

N. J. Wietor is more than pleased with the way the October Frost chrysanthemum is doing with his firm and with nearly all to whom they sold cuttings last spring. He says that it has interested him especially to note that the growers who followed their advice with regard to the bud to take, have profited by the experience gained by Wietor Bros., while those who did not have the benefit of this advice, or who disregarded it, have in some conspicuous instances failed to get the results they should have had.

C. W. Kellar says that it is noteworthy that orchids are being called for by many in towns where they have not previously been used. He had a number of such shipping orders on this week.

Bassett & Washburn have begun to cut chrysanthemums.

Andrew McAdams has been suffering from a sprained ankle.

John T. Muir is able to be about as usual, after an illness which confined him to his bed.

A. L. Randall is expected home this week, after his summer spent as usual on his Michigan fruit farm. Webster Randall will leave the latter part of the week for a visit at his old home in western Pennsylvania.

F. Stielow, at Niles Center, says that all the carnations in that neighborhood are much smaller than usual at this date. He thinks he is at least a month behind last year.

Klehm's Nurseries, at Arlington Heights, are busy finishing up the rebuilding operations. They have planted all the new range to roses, principally Brides. Retail trade is excellent with them. They have not yet begun replanting peonies, and have only a little of this work to do this year.

John Zech, of Zech & Mann, has been ill for a week, suffering with stomach trouble.

Will Graff, of Columbus, O., arrived in town September 30, looking for stock. He says business is excellent at Columbus, his only difficulty being in securing enough flowers. His brother, Sam Graff, leaves about October 15 for Seattle.

J. E. Jensen, of Jensen & Dekema, went to Springfield Monday evening to exhibit blooms of W. N. Rudd's new carnations at the state fair. A. F. Lon-gren, of Des Plaines, also was in attendance.

J. A. Budlong is cutting some splendid Monrovia chrysanthemums, the stem and foliage being as good as the flower. Many growers seem to have poor foliage this year.

Weiland & Risch report an especially strong demand for stock for funeral purposes, but say that on Monday the local buyers were glad to pay 2 cents for Lawson with stems not over six inches.

E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Brothers Co., says that it is always either Christmas or Fourth of July in the flower business in this city and that it seems to get worse from year to year. It is either a feast or a famine.

Hugo Schroeter, of Detroit, was in town September 28 to 30, purchasing stock for the big decoration B. Schroeter puts up each fall for a Detroit department store. Beauties and roses were what he was after. Among other visitors were W. Hill, of Toronto, Ont., and P. J. Delf, Marquette, Mich.

At the Coliseum Friday evening, September 27, there were big doings, 1,100 candidates being initiated in the presence of 10,000 members of the Mystic Shrine. Many florist Shriners were called to town by the event, said to be the greatest in the history of the order. Among those present were W. W. Coles, Kokomo, Ind., and W. W. Seekins, Duluth, Minn.

The change of date for the flower show, opening November 6 instead of a week earlier, pleases the growers and doubtless will result in increasing the number of exhibitors, for more of them will have stock in good shape.

J. L. Raske has reopened his stand in the Board of Trade building.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business is not as steady as it might be. Funeral work is the bulk of the business done throughout the city, and outside of that and a few small weddings, I cannot say much for the cut flower trade last week. This month the trade is looking forward to a good business, as a number of large orders have been booked for weddings, receptions and dinners.

Stock is becoming better in color and length of stem. In roses American Beauties have the call, as in all grades they clean up daily at good prices. Of Bride and Maid there is little select stock, but plenty of first and second grades. Carnot, Richmond and Killarney sell well when not too open.

Carnations are also better as to bloom. Stems still are too short to bring anything like high prices. Enchantress is the best in the market. Rose-pink Enchantress, too, is good. Lawson, Cardinal and Lady Bountiful have good flowers only. Chrysanthemums are expected to arrive this week. Asters are over. A few small California violets are coming, but meet with slow sale. Cosmos is expected this week. Quite a few good dahlias are in. In greens the market is well stocked. Wild smilax has a good call at all the wholesale houses.

Various Notes.

Fred Ammann, of Edwardsville, was a caller last week. He will be in Springfield all this week, where he expects to see a great many of his St. Louis and Chicago friends at the Illinois state fair.

Harry Rieman was in Hot Springs, Ark., last week, representing Ostertag Bros., who had the decorations during the street fair at that place.

The engagement of Miss Hattie Wilkerson and Robert F. Tesson is announced. The wedding will take place sometime this month.

Mrs. William Ellison is back from her summer trip and is busy making preparations for a number of wedding decorations, orders for which were booked while she was away.

Adolph Brix announces that he will hold a free flower show for the benefit of his north side customers in the Young Men's Christian Association rooms, Nineteenth and St. Louis avenue, November 7-9, just one week before the big show to be given by the St. Louis Horticultural Society. Mr. Brix is enterprising and has built up a large trade in North St. Louis, where he started in a small way.

Grimm & Gorley are making big preparations for the float which is to represent them in the big label parade this week.

A number of large fall opening decorations were made this week by Beyer, Schray and Young, all using a great many plants.

This week is called Veiled Prophet's and Roosevelt's week and all the downtown stores are handsomely decorated for the occasion. Most of the work was done by the Schuerman Floral Co., which makes a specialty of this kind of work.

Mrs. M. M. Ayers has her Grand avenue place looking finer than ever, with a great many changes. She also has a handsome new delivery wagon.

Miss M. S. Newman also has a new, good looking delivery wagon. Since she returned from her summer trip many good changes have been made.

September 30 the large hall in the Merchants' Exchange was decorated by C. Young & Sons Co. for the Veiled Prophet's ball and President Roosevelt.

George B. Windler will have a fine lot of pot chrysanthemums.

A telegram to Carew Sanders, announcing the death of his cousin, Edgar Sanders, at Chicago, on September 29, caused much regret. C. C. Sanders attended the funeral.

Mrs. M. S. Vesey, of Fort Wayne, Ind., is a visitor this week, a guest of the Misses Meinhardt.

A. J. Bentzen, of the Bentzen Floral Co., reports that they will have a large float in the label parade October 5. They have a fine lot of poinsettias. The company will make an exhibit of mum plants at the flower show.

The St. Louis Florists' Club meeting will take place next Thursday afternoon, October 10, in the Burlington building. President Young would like to see a large attendance at this meeting.

J. J. B.

DES PLAINES, ILL.—A. F. Longren has gone to see the floral exhibit at the state fair.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

We have had a week of rain and chill, with little change in business conditions. A slight improvement was noticeable Saturday. With cooler weather and sunshine, with which the week has begun, the market should harden and prices commence their fall advance.

The long spell of wet weather has depleted the supply of outdoor stock, dahlias and asters showing the bad effects of the storm and shipments growing less. Both will be out of the way apparently before the chrysanthemum flood begins. Up to date few mums have reached the market. Those arriving have been used in decorating the retail windows and have brought good prices. Monrovia, Montmort and Gastellier comprise the arrivals and as high as 75 cents was paid for the best of them.

Bride, Maid and Richmond are improving daily, and for the best 6 cents is the asking price; 25 cents is top for Beauties, and there are few of them. The lower grades of all roses are correspondingly low in price.

Carnations improve slowly. A few good ones are arriving, but nine-tenths of the supply is short-stemmed and disposed of at buyer's option. Cosmos is fine and abundant. There are plenty of orchids and values have retrograded.

Of violets the less said the better. The demand cannot be hoped for before the middle of the month, and yet the growers are sending them along, as if it were in our power to create a call for them.

Hodgson Bankrupt.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed September 27, against J. M. Hodgson (corporation), 718 Fifth avenue and Newport, R. I., by Alex J. Guttman, a creditor for $530 on two protested notes. It was alleged that the corporation while insolvent paid $200 to a creditor in Newport to prefer him and permitted Julius Roehrs Co., a creditor, to obtain preference through legal proceedings. The business was established in 1865 by J. M. Hodgson, who died some years ago, and the present corporation succeeded to the business in February, 1902, with a capital stock of $40,000; Charles F. Hodgson, president. Joseph A. Arnold, attorney for the corporation, said the failure was due to continued poor business and lack of capital. Liabilities are placed at $10,000 and assets $5,000.

Various Notes.

The New York Herald of September 29 devoted a whole page to the modest violet, with illustrations of planting, picking and packing that were correct and interesting. The violet crop of the country is estimated at $2,000,000 yearly, Rhinebeck getting $500,000 as its share. Overproduction is lamented.

The Florists' Club meets October 14 to listen to a lecture by Mr. Nash, of the Botanical Gardens, on "Water Lilies," illustrated. There will be a special offering of southern cured delicacies from the Jamestown exposition, imported by Caterer Nugent, and an exhibition of novelties.

The dahlia show at the American Institute last week was a success. Large delegations from society's ranks and a goodly number of the common people attended. A few of the florists and gardeners were also there. Julius Roehrs Co. exhibited a splendid bank of orchids and foliage plants. In this department there was no competition. Rickards Bros. were the only bulb exhibitors, and had a fine assortment. Will Rickards was in charge. Ellwanger & Barry, of Rochester, made their usual excellent exhibit of fruit. J. T. Lovett, of Little Silver, N. J., carried off many of the honors for dahlias. The new red single, Seawood, deserves special mention. Lester Lovett was in charge of the display. Other exhibitors and prize winners were L. M. Noe, of Madison; F. R. Pierson Co., John Lewis Childs, and Messrs. Burt and Scott Bros.

The great Long Island Fair at Mineola had to combat bad weather and rain, but the attendance totaled over 100,000. Harry Turner, of Castle Gould, staged a most effective bank of superb celosias, with specimen crotons, ferns and foliage plants, that attracted great attention. The association's diploma of superior merit was awarded. John Lewis Childs also had a magnificent bank of palms and foliage plants and the usual gladiolus display. Adolph Jaenicke planted a fine group of evergreens, with rustic seats, pagoda, and all the accessories of his vocation. He is a graduate of Berlin, Paris, London and Switzerland and for the last twelve years has been one of the superintendents with John Lewis Childs. Stumpp & Walter Co. had a large collection of fruits, bulbs, etc.

In these days of society formations, from Philadelphia to Jamestown, it will be no surprise to know that the nucleus of an orchid society is gathering form at this great center of the orchid industry of this country. Messrs. Roehrs and Manda are the leading spirits in this enterprise. They expect to number in their membership many of the proprietors of the leading private estates of America.

James Hart, in addition to his wholesale cut flower business, has done a large trade in New York hotel decoration and has invented a new style of plant stand that is practical and popular.

Reed & Keller have invented a new process of preserving magnolia leaves that makes them durable. Wreaths can be made up, and will keep almost indefinitely. Mr. Reed says the firm is working night and day, and away behind in filling orders, so great is the demand. All the florists' supply houses have the same story of abundant orders, and large shipments. There does not seem to be any lack of optimism and enterprise in this branch of the trade.

Ford Bros. are receiving fine Beauties from the Florex Gardens, of North Wales, Pa. Will Ford was a visitor at the Gardens when on his vacation, and says in one house of 150x500 he saw 45,000 Beauty plants.

Perkins & Nelson are installing an ice-box 7x27 in their store in the Coogan building. The veteran shows few effects of over thirty-five years' wholesaling. The new firm has good facilities and lots of enterprise, and is doing well.

Mr. Hillman, of the Cut Flower Co., has been away for two weeks on his annual vacation.

Tuesday of this week Stumpp & Walter Co. celebrated its tenth anniversary.

Samuel Parsons, Jr., has been appointed park commissioner for New York, a very popular and desirable selection.

William Good, of Galvin's Back Bay store, Boston, was in the city last week. Frank Good is now foreman in the Onaway store in New York.

sympathy of all in the death of his wife last week.

Walter Sheridan has been quite ill for two weeks, but is now fast convalescing.

A notable decoration October 2 was made by J. H. Small & Sons at the Waldorf-Astoria on the occasion of the banquet of the cotton merchants of this city to their English visitors of the Liverpool Exchange. American Beauties and immense quantities of cotton balls were used in the unique display.

F. H. Traendly, J. K. Allen and Joseph Fenrich gave considerable time last week to traveling and, in fact, all the wholesalers have made fraternal calls, during the last month, on their sources of supply. Everyone comes back optimistic and cheerful as to the outlook. The first good frost will start the wheels again.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Despite the weather, conditions are steadily improving. The volume of business is larger than a week ago, with last Saturday coming very close to a record-maker for September. Dahlias are arriving in enormous quantities, on the days when rain has not spoiled the blooms. The demand for them is excellent, at prices that appear remunerative. Asters are on the wane, the bulk of the stock being of poorer quality, and much shorter in stem. Prices are receding. The immense crop of tea roses, so noticeable during the middle of last month, is now over, with scarcely enough good stock to satisfy the demand, the result being advancing prices, especially on Kaiserin, Bride, Maid and Killarney.

Valley is in good demand. Cattleyas are a feature of the market, the quantity larger, probably, than ever before at this season, the quality very fine. There appears to be enough demand to keep the price steady at this week's lower quotation. Single violets are becoming more plentiful and have improved in quality and length of stem. They are also fragrant, an indispensable quality in the violet. Gardenias have made their appearance from distant points. Cosmos is fine and abundant. Tuberoses can now be had in quantity. Chrysanthemums have made their appearance in numbers, Monrovia, Mrs. Kalb, Glory of Pacific and Cremo being first varieties.

Wild smilax is in active demand. The market for greens is only fair.

Club Meeting.

Over 100 members attended the annual meeting of the Florists' Club Tuesday evening, October 1. Kind letters were received from the Detroit, New York and Washington clubs, expressing appreciation of the entertainment at the S. A. F. convention. These letters were ordered placed in the minutes.

J. Wm. Colflesh resigned as treasurer. The resignation was accepted with re-

Two Official Letters.

Philadelphians will be interested in two official letters recently received at Riverton, N. J. One is from the Pittsburgh and Allegheny Gardeners' and Florists' Club, expressing thanks for the hospitality extended to its members who were present at the entertainment tendered to the S. A. F. at Riverton August 21. The letter continued by requesting the company to send specimen fronds of each variety of nephrolepis on the place to the October meeting of the club, held October 1. The letter was signed by the president, J. W. Jones.

The other letter was from the Detroit Florists' Club, couched in terms of hearty commendation for the courtesies extended by the company to those of its members who were present at the outing tendered the convention in August at Riverton, and highly commending the excellent culture everywhere in evidence on the farm. This letter was signed by J. F. Sullivan, secretary.

These letters will give all plant lovers pleasure, as the Dreer place is recognized as being our leading horticultural establishment, both in size and in variety of plants grown.

Westerly.

L. J. Reuter, who made many friends while in this city, gave Phil a cordial invitation to visit his father's place at Westerly, R. I., during the summer or early fall. This invitation, highly prized, was not intended to share the fate of all invitations where time is not set. It so happened, however, that the tide of human events landed Phil at Westerly in the wee small hours, with but limited time at his disposal. This time was utilized and Mr. Reuter's place discovered ere long: A beautiful place, with grass and terraces and neatness everywhere, a place that would serve admirably for an object lesson to S. S. Skidelsky's talk on what each of us ought to do to educate the public. Mr. Skidelsky intended to tell, and probably has told, the Council of Horticulture that the true advancement of public interests in beautifying the home lay in the hands of the florists themselves, who should make their places object lessons to their customers.

Phil believes that it is not the right thing to look over a man's place when that man is absent, or it may be in bed, no matter how early a riser he be, so a glance only was given to the houses, revealing the fact that Mr. Reuter believes in producing everything that his customers need, and in doing everything that he attempts thoroughly. But time flies, and Phil was obliged to go just as the first employee was seen riding in on his wheel to begin the day's work.

European Notes.

George A. Strohlein, who returned from abroad in the middle of September, kindly consented to give REVIEW readers a few impressions of his trip abroad. He says that the azaleas are later this year than usual, fears having been entertained during August as to the buds setting properly. Warm weather in September, however, has ripened the wood nicely, and the buds are now in good condition. Azalea shipments will probably be later this year than usual, but it is believed the plants will be up to the standard.

The demand for palms in Europe is excellent. The cold weather in the south of France, where large crops of Phoenix Canariensis were frosted in the open ground, has quickened the demand for kentias and other palms to fill their place.

Horticulturists, in Germany especially, are prosperous, Mr. Strohlein says, and they are enjoying labor and socialistic strikes. Mr. Strohlein thought that there were comparatively few novelties of merit in sight at present. He commented with pleasure on the keen interest shown by all classes of people in Germany in their gardens, the cottagers vying with

Various Notes.

The Robert Craig Co. has been experiencing a gratifyingly heavy demand for its specialties in decorative and flowering plants. The stock is exceptionally fine this year.

William C. Smith is making a specialty of Nephrolepis Scottii and Whitmani. He propagates Ficus elastica very cleverly.

The Leo Niessen Co. is experiencing a lively demand for wild smilax, a good sign that the decorative season is beginning.

Edward Dornheim, of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., says that Kriemhilde is the best selling dahlia on the market today.

William Kiefaber and Charles E. Pease, of the Miami Floral Co., Dayton, O., are in town this week. They visited Stephen Mortesen, of Southampton, Pa., and the Florex Gardens, at North Wales, Pa.

William Palmer, of Buffalo, was in the city last week.

The Florex Gardens has just completed planting the smaller house, 30x130, which was used early in the season for young Beauty plants, with carnations. The varieties planted in this house are Enchantress, White Enchantress, Beacon, Winsor, White Perfection, Lieut. Peary and Queen.

John McIntyre completed his first year in business September 30.

William P. Craig has been highly complimented on the quality of the stock of Nephrolepis Amerpohlii that he is sending out. Mr. Craig says that all his orders have been filled and he has some fine plants on hand.

William J. Baker received the first white chrysanthemums, Mrs. Kalb, October 1. They were from William Swayne, of Kennett Square. Glory of the Pacific and Cremo followed a few days later.

84. In the REVIEW for August 22 was an article on bulbs. It read in part as follows: "Incarvillea is a coming plant, particularly as a garden flower, and undoubtedly can be forced. If you plant 500 strong roots, the flowers will absolutely come in bloom the same day." I cannot understand why, if one plants 500 strong roots, the flowers will appear the same day. Does the number of roots planted conduce to the speedy blooming? And how can a bulb bloom before it is rooted?

Vegetable Forcing.

BEES IN GREENHOUSES.

Not many years ago vegetable growers devoted much time and labor to the hand pollination of fruit-bearing vegetables indoors in winter, such as cucumbers and tomatoes. The slow, tedious task of knocking the pollen from the flowers into a silver spoon or a watch crystal on a paddle, and dipping a tiny camel's-hair brush into this and applying the pollen to the fruit-bearing flowers, would certainly seem an expensive operation at the present prices paid for labor. Thanks to the honey bees and our better knowledge of handling them, the vegetable forcer does not now have to hire extra help for fertilizing or pollinating the blooms in order to have the plants set fruit.

In plants and flowers there is what corresponds to sexes in animals. In some plants both sexes of bloom exist on each plant, and in some others the sexes are on different plants. And again, in some instances both sexes exist in the same bloom. In any case the fruitfulness depends upon pollination of the pistil by grains of pollen from the stamen. The stigma, the upper part of the pistil, is covered with a sticky substance to which the pollen adheres when placed there, whether by hand, by insects or accidentally by currents of air. As soon as the pollen is located it puts forth pollen tubes, which lengthen until they reach the ovules. This completes fertilization and causes the fruit or seed to grow and mature for reproduction.

Honey bees are now used in nearly all vegetable-forcing establishments for the pollination of the blooms. In their efforts to gather honey they get themselves literally covered with the pollen, which they seldom fail to leave just where it is wanted in going from bloom to bloom, and a good swarm in a house of cucumbers will accomplish in less than an hour each morning more than several hands could do in a whole day.

While the value of the honey bee as a pollen distributor is known to many, it is safe to say that the majority of gardeners and horticulturists do not realize or appreciate the great value of our little friend and helper. In some fruit-growing localities, where large fruit farms are owned or controlled by one person, many swarms of bees are kept and a greater profit is made on the increased production of fruit than on the honey produced. The flower must be pollinated and, as in all the other work, if there are not enough men or bees to do it there is a loss. In some instances careful tests have been made, which proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the absence of bees was the cause of very light crops. To the outdoor gardener or fruit grower who does not know of bees within a half-mile of his place, we would say, keep some yourself, by all means.

Bees are sometimes supposed to injure fruit by stinging it or tearing it open. This supposition is, however, incorrect. The honey bee will gather honey material where fruit is already stung by wasps or torn by birds, etc., but will not injure it in any way to cause the juice to flow.

Bees are often poisoned in great quantities by getting onto fruit trees which were sprayed with arsenates and other poisonous mixtures when in full bloom. This should never be done, but the poison should be applied just before the buds

THE READERS' CORNER.

A Hint to Correspondents.

I suppose the REVIEW is open to suggestions from its readers; at least, I take it for granted that it is. I have noticed that communications, seasonable suggestions, carnation and mum notes, etc., seldom give either a date, so as to enable the reader to determine the exact time of the season the writer had in mind when writing his article, or a post-office address, so one could judge of the climatology the writer had to contend with.

I suppose the REVIEW is cosmopolitan in its intentions, aiming to cover the whole United States and not only the local conditions where it is published, for what may be seasonable in northern Illinois, or in Massachusetts, or Pennsylvania, may be out of season here, in Texas. If climate and soil be two essentials for proper plant growth, then before one can theorize on the value of advice it is absolutely necessary for one to know where the article was written or what locality the writer had in mind. I see that most of your articles and communications are only signed with the initials of the writers' names. It seems to me that if an article is worth publishing, the writer ought not to object to his name and address being published in full, if it is withheld at his request. Anyway, there is little utility in the publication of a suggestion or note if one has to guess at the conditions the writer had in mind when he wrote it.

If you will take note of this point and compare the difference between soil and climate in northern Illinois and southwestern Texas, you will see what I am driving at. J. J. NUSSBAUMER.

THE PITTSBURG PARKS.

I recently visited some of the Pittsburgh parks, beginning with Schenley park, where I met Mr. Jones, and together we took a look through all the greenhouses and their surroundings. There is some fine bedding here and the plants in general are looking well. The chrysanthemums are especially fine, and their appearance indicates that there will be as good a show this year as ever. At Highland park, also, the bedding is beautiful ONION sets may be plentiful, but the brokers who deal more or less in the commodity cannot find many to start the season with.

THE fact that Alaska peas are selling for $4 per bushel in round lots to the trade is an indication that there is a scarcity somewhere.

IN Wisconsin there is reported to be a light crop of seed potatoes, although advices indicate that in the country at large there is a normal yield.

A. T. BODDINGTON, New York, will this season send out a new cosmos, named Lady Lenox, of gigantic size, the flowers being said to be six to seven inches in diameter.

MAX WILHELMI, of the Barteldes Seed Co., Lawrence, Kan., was a recent visitor at Chicago. He spent several days in the vicinity and it is not thought that he was looking for popcorn, although he intimated that might be the object of his quest.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & Co., Philadelphia, report orders for their two new Spencer sweet peas coming in at a remarkable rate. One order received September 24, from a retail seed house, called for 8,000 packets. The novelties are packeted in two sizes, containing ten seeds and twenty-five seeds each.

THE L. L. Olds Seed Co., Clinton, Wis., located right in the barley country, report that they are no more fortunate than the rest of the seed trade this year, in the matter of crops for seed purposes. Potatoes, barley, speltz and oats are their specialties, and all are short crops. Corn with them is two weeks late and not yet out of danger.

L. L. MAY & Co., St. Paul, have incorporated with a capital stock of $200,000, one-half preferred. Officers are: L. L. May, president and treasurer; F. W. May, vice-president; E. W. Reid, secretary; W. H. Lovell, assistant treasurer. This firm has vacated the warehouse on Minnesota street and moved its offices to the second floor of the Sixth street store. A new fireproof concrete warehouse is being erected on Como avenue, near the greenhouses, where the wholesale seed business will be handled.

OTTO SCHWILL, son of the late Otto Schwill, has acquired the interests of all the other heirs and some other stockholders in the corporation known as Otto Schwill & Co., at Memphis, of which he is now president. Mr. Schwill has for years done a large florists' business as the Idlewild Greenhouses, which he has now largely turned over to a manager, so that he can give his personal attention to the seed business, which is increasing rapidly. The firm was established in 1869 and incorporation followed in 1899. The premises at 20 South Front street have just been doubled by securing No. 18, next door. A general catalogue trade is done. Jacob F. Haid, a brother-in-law of Mr. Schwill, is secretary, treasurer and office manager.

VISITED CHICAGO: S. A. Wilson, of the L. L. Olds Seed Co., Clinton, Wis.

FOR the National Corn Exposition at Chicago, October 5 to 19, more than $75,000 in cash and merchandise premiums are offered.

WILLIAM EMERSON, of the Western Seed & Irrigation Co., Fremont, Neb., is on a tour of inspection of the sweet corn and vine seed crops.

SEEDSMEN will be interested in Farmers' Bulletin No. 306, just issued by the Department of Agriculture. The title is "Dodder in Relation to Farm Seeds."

THE postage on letters to or from Europe is now 5 cents for the first ounce and 3 cents for each subsequent ounce or fraction thereof. Before October 1 it was 5 cents for each half ounce.

B. SUZUKI, of the Yokohama Nursery Co., thinks the Island of Formosa will be looked to in the future for our supplies of longiflorum, replacing the Bermuda-grown bulbs to a large extent.

THE fact that the California onion crop for seed is turning out better than was expected in the excitement following the floods last spring should not cause anyone to lose sight of the fact that the high water materially reduced the acreage, so that a big scarcity is inevitable.

BEANS are reported to be spoiling in the straw. Many crops were cut previous to the wet weather and have been lying in windrows. The weather during the last stages of the crop's growth was not favorable to good ripening and the moisture left in the pod, together with the wet straw, is causing a mould that will cut the crop considerably.

WESTERN NEW YORK CROPS.

The general line of crops in western New York will be unusually light; all varieties, including field and sweet corn, beans, etc. Tomatoes will be only a medium crop.

The season was so backward that our asters, of which we grow in the neighborhood of forty acres, are in full bloom September 25, but with a favorable fall will ripen.

ONION SETS.

The Chicago onion set crop is harvested, and part of it has been put into winter storage. Milling for early orders is under way and a few cars have been shipped out.

The crop, while far below normal as to quantity, disappoints no one, as this has been expected since midsummer. The worst hit of any grower, as far as a short crop goes, is unquestionably the one who had the most land planted. As has been recorded previously in the REVIEW, many of the gardeners, with whom onion set growing is but a side line, have fared better than the professionals and have no cause for complaint. The land that these gardeners work is situated in such a way as enabled it to withstand the adverse conditions of the freakish weather. The quantity of sets harvested in this favored section did not, however, exceed 15,000 bushels, largely whites, and for the most part they have been bought in by the Leonard Seed Co.

The quantity of sets harvested this year at Chicago has been variously estimated. It has been given out by S. F. Leonard that the crop at Chicago in a normal year is not far from 400,000 bushels. The same authority, it is said, puts this year's crop at 240,000 bushels. This is 100,000 bushels less than last year's crop and as no onion set section claims an increase this year over its last year's harvest, the situation is obvious.

MICHIGAN BEAN PROSPECTS.

Alfred J. Brown, Grand Rapids, Mich., writes as follows under date of September 27:

"We wish to correct you in your reports of the bean crop. The weather has been, and is still, most unfavorable, and beans have been damaged to a very large extent. This embraces all varieties. The most damage, we fear, will be done to the green-podded sorts, such as Valentines, Refugees, Mohawks and all late-maturing varieties. It is true that some crops of wax beans have been harvested, but there will be a heavy shrinkage on account of so much hand-picking, and, besides, the beans do not seem to be turning out in quantity anything like what we expected. Taking the crop as a whole, it is short and this fact will be recognized a little later, when bean growers begin to get in their crops and hand-pick them."

LONG ISLAND CABBAGE.

The seed crops on Long Island have all been harvested and, so far as cabbage was concerned, returns have been rather better than anticipated, although upon some varieties they have been short. The demand for cabbage seed, particularly in the south, has been much larger than for two or three years past and this increased demand, more than any great shortage in the crop itself, has led to a short supply on quite a number of the varieties.

The spinach crop on Long Island was not better than one-half crop and all of the seed crops were shortened by the excessively dry summer.

one season results, for it is probably unequaled for producing a crop of feed in early spring and gives a succession of growths until fall, but is not perennial and hence not adapted to permanent pastures. According to reports from Great Britain, this sort is in harvest and a fair crop is expected; the color will perhaps be a little darker than last year. From France a good crop is reported, and Conrad Appel, of Darmstadt, says samples already to hand show satisfactory qualities. The seed will be obtained at about the same prices as last season. The harvest of Lolium perenne, perennial ryegrass, is also late this year, and most of the samples represent darker qualities. Heavy lots of more than twenty-six pounds bushel-weight will be scarce this season and in strong demand. Prices rule somewhat higher than in 1906.

PEAS AND BEANS.

S. M. Pease, president of the Cleveland Seed Co., Avon, N. Y., writes as follows under date of September 25:

"Our pea crop in Canada is showing up fully fifty per cent short of an average crop, so far as deliveries have been made. As a rule the first deliveries are from the best crops. We do not anticipate any improvement as to average quantity. Values of the leading sorts have nearly doubled from early contract prices, especially of canners' sorts.

"Beans in western New York must necessarily make a light crop. The dry weather when they were podding and filling had a serious effect on them. It is true no deliveries of the new crop have been made yet, and we may possibly be wrong in our judgment, but guess not. Another thirty days will tell the story."

SOUTHERN SEED CROPS.

After all the unfavorable reports of this, most disappointing of seasons, it is a pleasure to receive such a letter as the following, dated September 25, written by the Amzi Godden Seed Co., Birmingham, Ala.:

"It might be of interest to your readers to know that we have the best crop of cowpeas in the south we have had for a number of years. The crop is not only large, notwithstanding the high price of seed last year, but owing to the favorable season for the maturity of the cowpea the quality will be much better than usual, and of course prices will rule much lower.

"The crop of melon seed, which has already been harvested, is only about an average one. But the quality and ger-

AN EXPERT OPINION

While in England during July the writer received a letter from MR. LESTER L. MORSE, the well-known grower and sweet pea specialist, of California, in which he spoke most enthusiastically of these two new Spencers. Mr. Morse had kindly traveled several hundred miles with our Mr. Earl to see the crops which were being grown for us in San Luis Obispo County, California, by REV. L. O. ROUTZAHN, on whose grounds both varieties had originated.

When preparing this, it occurred to us that it would be well to give the opinion of such a recognized expert as Mr. Morse, who had no financial interest whatever in either variety. Instead of asking, therefore, merely for permission to quote from his personal letter, we wired that we were now preparing circular for the English trade and would like him to telegraph us his impartial opinion of the TWO NEW SPENCERS. His telegram reads as follows:

San Francisco, California, August 26, 1907.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia:—

As seen Routzahn's both unquestionably finest of their class. Immense size, wavy; long stems; fragrant. White especially excels all other whites. LESTER L. MORSE.

ILLUSTRATED CIRCULAR will be mailed upon application

BURPEE'S WHITE SPENCER

produces in the greatest profusion flowers of enormous size that are absolutely pure white. It is white-seeded and comes true to the Countess Spencer type. The standard is decidedly waved, crinkled and fluted; the wavy wings are so folded that the keel is almost hidden. The standard measures from one and three-quarters to two inches across by one and three-eighths to one and five-eighths inches in depth. The wings are fully an inch wide and nearly as deep as the standard. The flowers are borne three and four to the stem and are uniformly well placed. The stems are extra strong and measure from twelve to fifteen inches in length.

The vines are most vigorous in growth, with heavy foliage, and attain a height of from ten to twelve feet. They are nearly covered with bloom, while the flowers retain their enormous size throughout the season. Of fine substance, the magnificent flowers are unsurpassed for cutting and for keeping after being cut.

In sealed packets containing ten seeds each: Per pkt., 15c; 2 pkts. for 25c; $1.00 per doz. pkts.; $7.00 per 100 pkts.

In sealed packets containing 25 seeds each: Per pkt., 25c; 5 pkts. for $1.00; $2.00 per doz. pkts.; $13.75 per 100 pkts.

NEW SWEET PEA

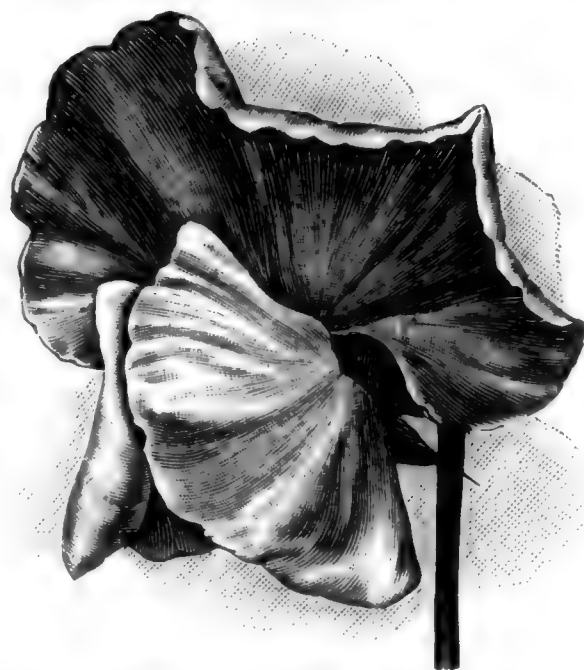

BURPEE'S PRIMROSE SPENCER

This is a fitting companion to Burpee's White Spencer. The vine is equally thrifty and free flowering, but slightly shorter in growth, attaining a height of eight to nine feet. The flowers are well placed on strong, thick stems, ten to twelve inches long, and are borne never less than three flowers, and sometimes four flowers, to the stem, as shown in the illustration. The standard measures one and three-quarters inches to nearly (if not quite) two inches across by about one and one-quarter inches deep; the wings are an inch across by one and one-eighth inches deep. The texture is fully as substantial as in Burpee's White Spencer.

The color is a pronounced primrose or creamy-yellow throughout both standard and wings. It is equal in depth and richness of color to The Hon. Mrs. E. Kenyon, which, of course it outranks in form and size. Both standard and wings are thoroughly crinkled or "waved." Burpee's Primrose Spencer will hold its own with any of the so-called "Yellow" Sweet Peas in color, while it surpasses all others of this color in size of flower, length of stem and vigor of growth. A decided acquisition to the Spencer type and the first of its color to be introduced.

In sealed packets containing ten seeds each: Per pkt., 15c; 2 pkts. for 25c; $1.00 per doz. pkts.; $7.00 per 100 pkts.

In sealed packets containing 25 seeds each: Per pkt., 25c; 5 pkts. for $1.00; $2.00 per doz. pkts.; $13.75 per 100 pkts.

9 to 11, in connection with the National Corn Exposition. This congress is in charge of Eugene D. Funk, of Shirley, Ill., president of the National Corn Growers' Association. Mr. Funk urges corn growers to attend and effect a permanent organization of the National Corn Growers' Association. Delegates from the leading states have been appointed, but all corn growers attending the exposition will be welcomed and can become members of the association.

The first session will be held at 2:30 Wednesday afternoon, October 9. This will be devoted to organization purposes and the election of officers for the ensuing year. The two remaining sessions will be held, one on the afternoon of October 10 and one on the afternoon of October 11. Among the speakers for these two sessions are the following: Prof. P. G. Holden, of Iowa; J. Dwight Funk, of Bloomington, Ill.; Prof. S. A. Forbes, of Urbana, Ill.; A. D. Shamel, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.; Prof. R. A. Moore, Madison, Wis.; T. P. Garton, of Garton Brothers, England; Prof. H. A. Huston, of Chicago, and many others.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seeds through the port of New York for the week ending September 21 were as follows:

Kind.	Bags.	Value.	Kind.	Bags.	Value.
Anatto1	$ 15	Hemp600	$2,793
Anise50	1,237	Millet200	509

In the same period the imports of bulbs, trees and plants were valued at $68,334.

DUTY ON COWPEAS.

The Board of General Appraisers at New York has rendered a decision on the protest of the Wallerstein Produce Co. affecting the rate of duty on cowpeas and admitting the importation on payment of 30 cents per bushel:

"The importation in question in this case consists of 1,000 bags of black-eyed beans, as described in the invoice. The testimony shows that the commodity is known as cowpeas or black-eyed peas. The importation was assessed for duty at 45 cents per bushel as beans under paragraph 240, tariff act of 1897. It is claimed by the importers to be dutiable at 30 cents per bushel as peas, dried, not specially provided for, under paragraph 250. The paragraphs involved read as follows:

240. Beans, 45 cents per bushel of sixty pounds.

250. Peas, green, in bulk or in barrels, sacks, or similar packages, and seed peas, 40 cents per bushel of sixty pounds; peas, dried, not specially provided for, 30 cents per bushel; split peas, 40 cents per bushel of sixty pounds; peas in cartons, papers, or other small packages, 1 cent per pound.

"A portion of the importation was submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture for identification, and in his report he describes the article in the following language:

These seeds are cowpeas, Vigna unguiculata, and consist of two varieties, the so-called black-eye and the so-called brown-eye. Botanically speaking, cowpeas are neither true beans nor true peas, though most closely relating to the former.

The use of cowpeas as a crop is, however, totally different from that of either the true beans or the true peas. A very large proportion of the cowpea crop growing in this country is for use as hay, though a considerable part is plowed under as green manure. These two varieties, namely, the black eye and the brown eye, are used more or less as human food, though none of the other varieties of cowpeas are so employed.

"If the testimony with regard to this commodity ended here we should be inclined, upon inspection of the sample, to classify it as beans. It appears, however, from the record that it occupies a sort of intermediate position between the bean and the pea; and as we can not conclude that this particular commodity is well known by the common and universally accepted name of bean or pea, we think it is a case where, for duty purposes, we should rely upon commercial designation, if there is one. The testimony of three witnesses on the behalf of the importers is found in the record. They are men of integrity and good standing, apparently, and have had long experience in handling peas and beans—one of them at least both here and in the south, where, we learn, the commodity in question is extensively grown. We think the testimony clearly shows that they are known—and were at the time of the passage of the act—in the trade and commerce of this country as peas, either cowpeas or black-eyed peas. We do not think the evidence would warrant us in finding that they are seed peas, as there appears to be just as much proof that they are for table consumption as that they are imported for seed purposes.

"The protest is therefore sustained and the collector's decision reversed."

AN ENGLISH SEEDSMAN'S SHOW.

John Wilson, seedsman at Hereford, England, recently held his thirteenth annual show under a lengthy expanse of canvas, in Hereford produce market. The main attraction was the open class for Excelsior onions, which has constituted the piece de resistance of all Mr. Wilson's shows. This year, considering the ungenial summer we have gone through, says a local paper, these onions were so remarkable a display as to constitute a surprise. Thirty-five grand lots were put up, many from distant parts of England, local growers of repute being also well represented. All were alike creditable to the growers and to this renowned variety. Tomatoes, a very attractive class, were much above the ordinary. The variety known as Wilson's Market Gardener secured three out of the four prizes. This is a variety which is making great headway, not only with exhibitors, but also with market gardeners. In Guernsey, where tomatoes are grown on a considerable scale, it has created a

ANTIRRHINUM FIERY BELT.

The distinct colors and greatly improved flower spikes among the tall and dwarf sections of snapdragons during recent years has increased their usefulness as border plants and for cut flower purposes. The variety Fiery Belt is sent out this season for the first time and is a very attractive variety, the name being peculiarly appropriate. One or two rows of it give a belt of color which fully justifies the name. A mass we have of it has been the admiration of both English and Canadian visitors, says T. H. Slade in the Gardeners' Magazine. Fiery Belt belongs to the dwarf section, the plants being of compact habit and about eighteen inches in height. It is one of Messrs. Carters' introductions. Snapdragons are not fastidious, as they grow in various soils and situations, but, like many other plants, they delight in generous treatment and are probably seen at their best when grown in a fairly heavy soil, for such land certainly produces good plants and flower spikes.

The Market.

Cut flower conditions remain the reverse of satisfactory. There are still quite a few outdoor blooms arriving, but the present week will about see the end of them, recent severe gales and rains having made them of poor quality. Roses are in overabundant supply and are hard to sell. Many go at $1 per hundred, some lower. A few choice Brides and Maids have realized $8. Some very nice Chatenay, Wellesley and Richmond are seen. Carnations are in increased supply, but are inclined to be druggy. From $1 to $3 are ruling rates. There is something of a glut of Fair Maid, which has been much grown as a summer variety. Quite a few single violets are arriving, but these sell slowly as yet. Chrysanthemums are coming from several growers. Some nice blooms are seen, the best making up to $3 per dozen.

Lilium longiflorum is scarce. L. speciosum is done for the season. Lily of the valley sells rather poorly. Gladioli and sweet peas are still arriving in reduced numbers. Asters are in fair supply and have sold well all the season. Quite a little candytuft, feverfew and Gypsophila acutifolia is seen.

Various Notes.

On visiting the dahlia farm of W. W. Rawson & Co., September 21, many of the club members were surprised to find several beds of Anemone coronaria and Anemone St. Brigid in bloom. A large
